

CRITIQUE

A Journal of Conspiracies & Metaphysics

Rene Guenon & the Lord of the World
The Pearl Harbor Lie
The Vatican Scandal
The Return of the Baal
Power Psychics Control the World
EMF: Mind Fields
The Metaphysical Struggle
Was Orwell Right?
Vatican II: the Subversion Battlefield Earth
The Nuclear Threat Comedy
The Universal Monetary Crisis
Magic — The Science of the Future?
Golitsyn: The KGB Defector
The Eleventh Dimension
Satanism in America

CRITIQUE

A Journal of Conspiracies & Metaphysics

CRITIQUE

A Journal of Conspiracies & Metaphysics

Introduction.....	i
Critique's Potpourri by Bob Banner .....	1
Afghanicide, The Famine TV Accident, Ethiopian Farm Policies Equal Famine A Course on Miracles, F.O.I.A., Hypnosis and the Psi War, High Voltage and Cancer, More on ELF, Changes in Global Weather, Resisting Influence Infrared and the Edible Air Conditioner, the Hitler/Occult Connection EMF: The Mind Fields, the Paper Plague, UFO / FOIA, A Cosmic Cover-up Economic Briefs, Civilization on Mars, Marijuana: A Large Cash Crop The Left Criticizes Israel
Return of the Baal: Metaphysical Exploration of Global Events by Jay Kinney .....	24
The Metaphysical Struggle.....	36
The Lord of the World by William Grimstad .....	39
Battlefield Earth: Covert Subversion of Humanity by Alanon .....	46
The Nuclear Threat Comedy by Ben G. Price .....	60
"I'm Alive" by Gary Butler .....	64
The Second Vatican Council: Spiritual Reform or Blueprint for Subversion by Joseph P. November .....	67
Exploring the Eleventh Dimension by Thomas Lyttle .....	74
The Un-Surprise Attack on Pearl Harbor by Richard H. Crum .....	76
Golitsyn: The KGB Defector by Robin Ramsay .....	88
The Universal Monetary Crisis by Robert Severin .....	92
Michele Sindona and the Vatican Bank Scandal by Peter Kross .....	95
Was Orwell Right? by John Bennett .....	101
The Secret World of Satanism in America by Gerald Dorset .....	106
Magic: The Science of the Future? by Edith Kermit Roosevelt .....	109
Power Psychics Control the World by Richard Clark, Ph.D. .....	112
Reviews and Letters.....	119

Critique is published in Santa Rosa, California. Subscription price are as follows: One year, $14; Two years, $26; Three years, $39. For overseas air delivery add $7 per year. For persons wanting their issue(s) sent out First Class include an extra $2 per issue.

Appropriate manuscripts are welcomed by the editor. If not accompanied with return postage the MSS becomes the property of Critique. Payment for accepted manuscripts ranges from $15-50 and three copies for a published [book] author; three (3) copies for new unpublished [book] authors. All correspondences, subscriptions, MSS, and books for review should be addressed to Critique c/o Bob Banner, POB 11451, Santa Rosa, California 95406. Volunteers for assisting in distribution, i.e., contacting bookstores, libraries, etc., and marketing are welcomed.

Contributors: Marian Kester, Robert Anton Wilson, Jay Kinney, Robert Hertz, Bruce Walton, Harvey Larson, Toyo Yamamoto, Richard LeFors Clark, Ph.D, Bob Banner, Michael Banovitch, Peter McAlpine, Bill Grimstad, Gerald Dorset, Kay Haugaard, Edith Kermit Roosevelt, Peter Kross, Robert Severin, Laird Wilcox, Peter McAlpine, Steven Jacobson, Ben Price, Antony Sutton, Wilbur C. Eveland, Philip H. Melanson, Robin Ramsay, L.A. Rollins, Paul Oesch, J.P. November, David C. Morrow and others whom we might have overlooked.

ISSN: 0735-6501

No part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical or photographic, by recording or any information storage or retrieval system or method now known or to be invented or adapted, without prior permission obtained in writing from the publisher except by a reviewer for a review written for inclusion in a journal, magazine, newspaper or broadcast.

Critique Publishing
POB 11451
Santa Rosa, CA 95406

© Copyright 1985 Critique Publishing

INTRODUCTION

With this issue, we are celebrating our fifth year of publishing. Not exactly a publishing empire yet; but we are persistently producing an extremely provocative semiannual Journal, which as one reader put it, we publish, "all the stuff that most of the magpie media won't touch with a ten-foot pole." And with this issue we have definitely achieved that posture. Also, as you can see, we have returned to typesetting (via micro-interfacing the Apple IIe with the CompuGraphic EditWriter 7700). Hope all those readers out there who have pleaded for Critique to return to the truly professional appearance will be happy. We certainly are.

Back to the issue. This issue is the hottest book we've produced. It includes everything that we've promised to explore. Jay Kinney, who had explored Philip K. Dick's science fiction material within the scope of Gnosticism in an earlier issue, has turned his pen to analyzing global events. Rather than perceive them in the mundane ordinary sense, he has put on some awfully strange lenses - lenses that employ the occult, the metaphysical, and esoteric tradition. As he states in "The Return of the Baal," "extreme times call for extreme descriptions." He certainly jolts us out of seeing the world as is "normally" perceived.

"The Metaphysical Struggle" is a collection of "messages"/Lessons from invisible entities communicated to mankind in 1918 via a very "normal" woman named Margaret Cameron. The book is out of print and we are contemplating whether to publish it. The messages/Lessons are excellent in their acute and concise description of our existence on this planet, no matter who communicated them. But, you'll have to see and read for yourself.

"The Lord of the World" by William Grimstad joins Kinney in employing the metaphysic to understand our modern era. A reprint from an earlier issue but a work that is extremely relevant and perceptive; and gives meticulous concern to Rene Guenon's ideas and critiques.

"Battlefield Earth" by contributor Alanon is both haunting and entertaining. It's baffling, jolting, frightening, and, as always, leaves us with an awe for the strange and eerie stories that are difficult to explain.

"The Nuclear Threat Comedy" by Ben G. Price is written by a new contributor. It is extremely well-written and Mr. Price hits the "threat" right smack on the head when he states that the "fear" of nuclear catastrophe has been "imposed by a power elite that has, after centuries of searching for an ideal tool for mass manipulation, finally developed the ultimate psychological shackle...which holds millions in catatonic complicity." I haven't read a more clear and poignant analyses of this most "comical" situation. His clarity, insight, and humorous solution is definitely refreshing. We hope Mr. Price will continue to contribute similarly succinct articles in the future.

Peter Kross and Joseph P. November, both regular contributors, turned their attention this issue with exploring the whole morbid affair involving the Vatican and various criminal elements.

"The Un-Surprise Attack on Pearl Harbor" by Richard H. Crum is the best piece I've read on the subject. He's clear, concerned, meticulous, and has the ability to tell a story that is crucial to our understanding of the machinations of history. It's revisionist history at its best.

Robin Ramsay, who wrote about Carroll Quigley and the Round Table in the past issue, has written an exploration of Golitsyn, the KGB defector and the interesting chaos and paranoia that emerges when a "defector" is "believed."

Robert Severin, a regular contributor, writes an overview of our monetary crisis bringing to the fore the insights contained in Penny Leroux's book In Banks We Trust.

John Bennett contributed an excellent piece answering the doubting question of whether or not George Orwell was "right" in his prophetic vision of modern society. To those persons who believe that "1984" ended on December 31, 1984 this article is highly essential reading.

Edith Kermit Roosevelt, a regular contributor [who wrote the article on psychic warfare in issue #15/16] who is keenly aware of the limitations of "science" and the dramatic challenge by many esoteric advances of non-traditional sciences has explored once again this most frequently misunderstood subject.

"The Secret World of Satanism in America" by regular contributor Gerald Dorset takes us on a short journey of satanic cults, their leaders, and their gruesome behavior.

Richard Clark, who wrote the "Revisionist Science" Manifesto in an earlier issue, has turned his attention and deep concern to the ruling elite and psi warfare. His ideas are sometimes staggering and often times his analyses is disturbing. What he has explored — the notion of employing sex for obtaining psychic power and global control — is both courageous and insightful. We hope to continue this most disturbing and obscure exploration of "power psychics" who "control the world."

We have book reviews by two notable researchers, Peter McAlpine and Laird Wilcox. Also, the "Potpourri" section which was quite successful and popular in the last issue, has been expanded and covers some very provocative material, such as ELF, Electro-Magnetic Fields, UFOs and the FOIA, the paper plague, invisible entities, the psi war, global weather changes, resisting mind control, and much more.

I would also like to mention at this time Critique's movement toward book publishing. Producing each issue of Critique has been very similar to publishing an edited book — so it was only a matter of time before we seriously solicited individual manuscripts for book publishing. We are proud to announce the forthcoming book by Steven Jacobson called Mind Control in the United States [ISBN: 0-911485-00-7; with an Introduction by Antony Sutton]. As of this writing (March 7), the manuscript is at the printer's. The pub date is scheduled for May/June. An ad for the book is in this issue. Also, there is a description of it in the new expanded order form which you will find enclosed with this issue.

Mind Control in the United States is like an issue of Critique. Author Jacobson explores succinctly the wide range of mental manipulation; covering such areas as subliminal techniques, film, TV, commercials, music, drugs, esoteric knowledge, invisible entities, the ruling elite, mental health, and much, much more. If there was ever a book that came close to being an Introduction to "Critique Philosophy" — Jacobson's book is it.

A note to subscribers: The number after your name on the address label is the number of the last issue of your subscription. Renewal cards are enclosed for those whose last issue is this one. Renewals are still $12, $2 off the normal subscription rate. Renew now and receive Steven Jacobson's book at 20% savings.

Bob Banner

CRITIQUES

Potpourri

by Bob Banner

AFGHANICIDE

December 27, 1984 marked the fifth anniversary of the Soviet invasion into Afghanistan. The West and the United Nations are appallingly silent on this whole morbid affair. The following is a brief outline of what has been occurring in Afghanistan:

- 1) The Soviet regime is using more than 100,000 of its troops to wage a genocidal war against a courageous and independent people.
- 2) They are using tanks, planes, chemical weapons, and mines to crush Afghan resistance.
- 3) Soviet strategy includes not only the deliberate killing of Afghans but producing mass starvation, resulting in high infant mortality and illiteracy. The Soviets are strafing, bombing, shelling, gassing, and burning entire villages for supporting the "Mujaheddin," the Afghan resistance fighters.
- 4) Soviets bomb and burn crops during harvest, wreck irrigation systems, and plant butterfly personnel bombs that rip the arms off of children (some are disguised as toys).
- 5) Soviets are engaged in a massive re-education campaign of Afghan children, shipping them to indoctrination schools/camps in the Soviet Union (Moscow) for as long as ten years.
- 6) The Soviet invasion has displaced 40% of the population. Four million have fled to neighboring Pakistan and another 2 million have left their homes to take refuge in remote mountainous areas.
- 7) The Soviets have been fighting the Afghans longer than they fought the Nazis.
- 8) There are no protests in Russia since the Russian people are being told that their "heroic" troops are fighting against "counterrevolutionaries" who are being supplied with arms by the US and other "imperialist nations."
- 9) Between Afghanistan and Pakistan lies an imposing wall of mountains pierced in a few spots by a narrow pass which have served as routes of commerce and invasion over the centuries. Alexander the Great sent his army through one of these passes when he invaded India nearly 2500 years ago. Today, these passes serve not as invasion routes but instead as escape routes.

Why has the West remained so silent? Why didn't their plight receive the same media coverage and results as the Ethiopian famine? Who chooses this plan of action? We are silent when a Dictator invades an independent country displacing and killing and destroying entire villages. But for some reason the popular "charity" knee-jerk reaction achieves incredible momentum when a Marxist government is incompetent at dealing with its agri-business policies which assists the holocaust we've seen in Ethiopia. And the Ethiopian regime not only disguises their blatant incompetence but audaciously demands more aid from the West, i.e., not only food, but equipment, fertilizers, trucks, etc. And what do the Soviets provide? More arms. (For more information on the Ethiopian crisis see "The Famine TV Accident" in this section).

As to why the American government has remained so quiet, Sasha Rakoczy, author of "Afghan Freedom Fighters' Leader Pleads for Help to Repel Commies" [The Spotlight (Jan. 7&14, 1985)], writes that "...[policy analysts] note if American inaction and absence of assistance to the Afghans allow the communists to consolidate their hold over this strategically situated nation, the Soviet Union will extend its tentacles toward the oil-rich Persian Gulf region and the entire Middle East - a far more dangerous setting for future conflict." However, according to a WASHINGTON POST/WEEKLY article "The CIA's Biggest Covert War Is In Afghanistan" by Bob Woodward and C.R. Babcock (Jan. 28, 1985) Congress has approved a $250 million this fiscal year for the Afghan program. "This would amount to more than 80% of the CIA's annual expenditures for covert operations, according to informed sources." Democratic Rep. Charles Wilson has been responsible for the shake-up about the Afghan crisis in Congress. His efforts have been successful at obtaining money for the CIA to "supply advanced, heavy antiaircraft cannons to the insurgents." The $250 million should be compared to the $24 million it was costing US taxpayers to support 15,000 "contras" fighting the Sandinista regime.

A Dec. 1984 report from the Helsinki Watch Committee, an independent human rights group analyzing violations in the Afghan war devotes 172 pages to the Soviets and 16 pages to the resistance. Now listen to this: After reviewing this literature the authors have the audacity to write: "the group apparently found substantial violations by the Soviets." [my emphasis] What kind of luke-warm Soviet apologist language is that?! Eventhough the money for the antiaircraft cannon is coming it takes a long time to get to the resistance fighters. The money and equipment have to go through Pakistan. President Zia has accepted the transporting of the equipment but demanded that the cannons (which cost about $1 million each) be foreign made, since he didn't want the Russians to know that Pakistan was agreeing with the transport of American made cannons. There is also much controversy concerning the war in Congress, the Senate and the House of Representatives. Even the CIA was shy about requesting an increase in the Afghan budget. And Wilson seems to be the only one who is using his limited position to push for more money. And when it comes to $250 million, Wilson says, "That's peanuts. We're talking about one B1 bomber (which costs $200 million). I'd give them five." What I don't understand is why, since such a clear and moral issue is here for the US to support the Afghan freedom fighters, is there such heeing and hawing. If the American media wanted to jump on a patriotic bandwagon and support the CIA, rather than criticizing their every move, then why not publicize the atrocities, why not support the "Mujaheddin" directly, increase military assistance to Zia's Pakistan if he'll allow more quick passageway of the military equipment to the Afghans. The government leaders are all sitting on their asses. They sit by and watch the Soviets commit genocide against a strong, courageous, and independent people but yet change their foreign policies when it comes to providing aid to the famine in the Marxist regime of Ethiopia.

The above information on the Afghan situation comes from The Christian News in an article entitled, "Five Years of Brutality Mark Soviet Invasion" by Oliver Starr (Dec. 31, 1984; p. 5) and the Afghan Refugee Fund/ISHK, POB 176, Los Altos, CA 94022 (except where otherwise noted) [The Fund is currently seeking to raise money to purchase mobile health units for women and children. Of the refugees 75% of them are women, children and elderly men. Remember: The Afghan problem is the world's largest refugee population.]

THE FAMINE TV ACCIDENT

"There is much to suggest that the famine story was not a network awakening to a new and broader view but an accident - an anomaly...the famine story had to break the odds; it had to slip through a crack in the operating theory that the more distant the place and the darker its people, the slimmer a story's chances of making it on the air." Peter Boyer

The following is a summarization of Peter Boyer's article in WJR [Washington Journalism Review] entitled, "Famine in Ethiopia: The TV Accident that Exploded" (Jan. 1985, p. 19).

ABC News Blakemore, correspondent in Rome, came by information that there was drought and famine in Ethiopia early in 1984. He wanted to go there and report. The home office said No! Joseph Angotti, NBC's General Manager of news in Europe, based in London, said "When you hear that we have another famine story from Ethiopia, there is a tendency to assume that it's just one more story that seems to be eternal."

So, we have a desensitized group of newscasters. Peter Jennings, had reiterated similar feelings when he said, "I have covered this kind of story in scores of places and it's always a hard story to get on the air. There is the feeling, wrongly I think, that Americans don't care." The famine in Africa were merely words from afar.

It was Michael Buerk of the BBC who provided the initial story. Being a BBC correspondent in Johannesburg, South Africa, he had been in Ethiopia in July and his report to the BBC so affected British viewers that they donated more than $10 million to relief agencies.

In October he returned to what he called a "biblical famine of the 20th century." He and his cameraman visited a camp where the tragedy had increased, where footage included children dying and thousands of desperate people crowding into the village.

NBC, with an exclusive arrangement with the BBC was then alerted to Buerk's report. NBC's London bureau sent a representative to the BBC for a screening of the material. "The material was exceptional and we needed to use it," recalls Angotti. People in London were a bit more keen to air the material than the folks back in New York. Paul Greenberg, executive producer of "Nightly News," continued to resist. There was so much more that the American people wanted/needed, like the elections, "who did what to whom in Nicaragua." But Angotti made a personal overseas phone call to Greenberg. "I called Paul and said that I just wanted to be sure that he understood how very, very exceptional this material was."

Greenberg consented to see the film. That evening it was aired. "There are very few times that a newsroom can be brought to complete silence," Greenberg said, "and this was one of them...Tears came to your eyes and you felt as if you'd just been hit in the stomach."

So, NBC, because of their special arrangement with the BBC (giving the network first crack at all BBC international television reports) and because of certain key elements of management, decided to go against the "words from afar" mentality and aired what soon was to explode over other networks and to become a global media event. CBS and ABC checked in with the famine story nearly a week later. NBC congratulated itself with a full page ad in "The Washington Post." CBS said that they had collected all the data on the famine for weeks completely independent of the BBC.

And, because of the news coverage explosion, US foreign policy changed. American aid to Ethiopia, a Marxist government with strong ties to Moscow, suddenly multiplied. But how long will it last? The media has trained us well to forget things in a short time. Give us a new distraction, a new sensation and we will soon forget. As Lou Cioffi, the veteran correspondent who was ABC's first man in Ethiopia, said, "we're all going to do a great job and get the country aroused and all of that, but what is going to happen 3 months from now? I don't know. But if we forget about this story, we're going to be wrong."

We are going to forget about it and yes, perhaps, we'll be wrong. We're going to forget about it simply because we don't have an attention span to focus on something more than the life of the initial excitement. Whether it has to do with our nature as humans or whether the media is responsible for this sensational/distraction syndrome is debatable. Perhaps a combination of factors is the answer. One should analyze both the sensational material that the media believes we want and the reasons why we love sensational material. In any event, what is important is to question how did this disaster happen; was it simply a natural phenomenon or a result of communist farm policies? How is the aid getting there? Is it reaching the Ethiopian people? Is the U.S. being set-up, because it changed its foreign policy due to the coverage explosion? How are the Soviets reacting? Is food enough or will the diseases that are prevalent in the south where the Ethiopians are being relocated, going to attack them after they've been fed?

ETHIOPIAN FARM POLICIES EQUAL FAMINE

However, let us move on to summarize Blaine Harden's article "How Ethiopians Helped Create its Famine" in The Washington Post (Weekly Edition, Jan. 14, 1985; p. 9). The major point in the article is that there is "widespread agreement that misguided farm policy was a key ingredient in turning the drought into a famine." The following is an outline of this argument:

The agricultural specialists that Mr. Harden interviewed were from Canada, Australia, Italy, Sweden, and from several UN agencies. Most wanted to remain anonymous for fear of being kicked out of either the government or from Ethiopia due to their criticism of the government's policies.

They agreed that the Marxist regime precipitated the famine by pursuing policies that destroyed the incentive of millions of peasant farmers to grow surplus food.

The farm policies of Lt. Col. Mengistu have eviscerated the individual farmers work ethic. They have state farms and producer's cooperatives, which according to western economists, lose money. And under the government's decade-old "land of the tiller" program, the most productive Ethiopian farmers have lived in fear that their farm land would be redistributed to other peasants or to farmer cooperatives. So, where's the incentive to make long-term investments in their land? Why should they break their backs building an irrigation system when next year they may find themselves farming elsewhere.

There are 27 drought-affected countries in Africa. Why was Ethiopia hit so hard? (The UN says that the famine has killed more than 300,000 and estimates to threaten 7.5 million.)

According to Giorgio Possio, an agronomist for the UN Food and Agriculture Organization, "The present famine is not only the result of climatic change, but of a massive long-term degradation of the land...The land has been mined, not maintained." The soil cannot store any water. "What 50 years ago was considered an average rainfall could now be considered a drought."

These specialists believe that the government's only hope of recovering from famine is to revive the work ethic and begin building water reservoirs, tree planting, farmland terracing and not to try to grow food on portions of the land since it would continue to destroy the land. However, for them to do this they must be assured that they would be fed.

The US has been the largest donor. A total of 300,000 tons of food have been pledged from all over the globe. The Soviet Union is supplying an estimated $3 billion worth of arms.

According to John Chamberlain, columnist for the "St. Louis Post Dispatch" (Dec. 25, 1984), Lt Col. Mengistu is blocking passage of supplies of food and clothing. "The problem is to get continuing compliance at the Ethiopian end, where dropping points must be provided."

A COURSE ON MIRACLES

There have been many persons who have been either chosen as being the link or acted as the scribe to words and messages from another dimension, or from the other side. Some call it automatic writing, trance writing, possession, hallucinations, or simply being in-tuned with the invisible realm or being connected with a particular invisible entity. The Koran is considered to be the infallible word of God, a transcript of a tablet preserved in heaven, revealed to Mohammed by the Angel Gabriel. Joseph Smith, it is alleged, received the golden tablets and was inspired and directed to translate it, which is now "The Book of Mormon." Jane Roberts communicated with an entity called Seth and recorded its messages. THE BETTY BOOK (1937) by Stewart Edward White is a story of Betty's psychic excursions into the world of "other-consciousness" and her communications with "invisible entities." The book is filled with philosophical messages; embodying a workable philosophy of life; aids to seekers after spiritual light. THE SEVEN PURPOSES by Margaret Cameron (1918) [an outline of her work is printed in this issue] published in 1918 is a work similar to that of Stewart White's except that Margaret herself is the one who was in communication with the "force" and wrote the twelve lessons "as if I must be dreaming."

Now we have what has been termed "A Course in Miracles." The "Course" was written down by two psychologists, doctors Helen Schucman and William Thetford, who were both on the faculty of Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons. In 1965 Helen had a series of dreams and imagery experiences that culminated in hearing an Inner Voice that began dictating the "Course." She chose to remain anonymous since she felt she was the scribe, not the author, of this 622 page text, three-volume work.

According to Helen, "It made no sound, but seemed to be giving me a kind of rapid, inner dictation which I took down in a shorthand notebook. The writing was never automatic. It could be interrupted at any time...It seemed to be a special assignment I had somehow, somewhere agreed to complete...The whole process took about six years."

The first printing, in 1976, consisted of 5,000 copies. There was no official advertising campaign for the book. But through word of mouth through friends and colleagues did demand for the "Course" increase (120,000 to date at a price of $30). "Course" study groups spread to 47 states and more than 15 countries across the world. Although it is based on Christian principles, the "Course" has been described by readers as the collective wisdom of all the world's great religions. It encourages readers to experience spiritual life, not just to be told about it.

The complete three-volume set which includes the underlying thought system, a workbook with 365 lessons, and a teacher's manual designed to clarify terms and facilitate the teaching-learning process can be purchased through the Foundation of Inner Peace, POB 635, Tiburon, CA 94920 ($30).

Psychologists Frances Vaughan and Roger Walsh have produced a collection of quotations from the "Course" in the hopes of "stimulating interest in exploring the original source." It's called ACCEPT THIS GIFT: "Selections From A Course in Miracles." It's a rather beautiful book with uplifting photographs and passages written in a poetic fashion. It's over 100 pages, hard back, and sells for $9.95 through that great publishing house in Los Angeles: Jeremy P. Tarcher, Inc., 9110 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles, CA 90069. The following is a passage from the book:

BELIEF

Your state of mind and your recognition of what is in it depend on what you believe about your mind. Whatever these beliefs may be, they are the premises that will determine what you accept into your mind.

When you believe something, you have made it true for you. No belief is neutral. Everyone has the power to dictate each decision you make. For a decision is a conclusion based on everything that you believe.

The recognition that you do not understand is a prerequisite for undoing your false ideas.

and

I am responsible for what I see. I choose the feelings I experience, and I decide upon the goal I would achieve. And everything that seems to happen to me I ask for and receive as I have asked.

F.O.I.A.

Have you ever wanted to use the FOIA (Freedom of Information Act) but just didn't know where to start? Do you want to see the files that the FBI, CIA, NSA, or any other agency might have on you? There is an organization called "A Project of the Fund for Open Information and Accountability, Inc." that has published a kit containing the answers of most frequently asked questions concerning the FOIA, addresses of selected Federal agencies, and copies of Forms which are to be used in requesting files. This kit, however, only has the forms which are required for seeking information on yourself. To request FBI documents from Headquarters and field offices on individuals other than yourself, or organizations or topics, they request that you call them at their New York office to receive the appropriate forms: (212) 477-3188. In order to receive this kit send a contribution of $10 or more to the Fund at 339 Lafayette St., New York, NY 10012. Or, a Capitol Information Association (CIA) Catalog just came to my attention and you can receive a "Guide on how to use the FOIA - and the Privacy Act" for $8.00. Write to CIA, Box 8275, Ann Arbor, MI 48107 for their free catalog. See their ad in this issue.

Responses of persons using the FOIA are welcome; address them to the Editor.

HYPNOSIS AND THE PSI WAR

The following is an excerpt from Richard L. Clark's article "Theoretical Paradigm" in the Nov./Dec. 1984 issue of ADVANCED SCIENCES ADVISORY (see ad in this issue). [Also, I had asked Richard Clark to expand on this subject which he did in an article called "Power Psychics Control the World" in this issue.]

Learning self-hypnosis is much more than learning a conditioned response. It is literally learning FAITH - primarily in yourself and your tremendous potentials. Your brain hemispheres do not have to be warring, antithetical systems any more than true science and true religion need war with each other. Both systems have their functions, limits, and purposes. The union of supposed opposites closes the circle of unitary completeness in the individual.

Under hypnosis psychic abilities will develop because they are only a different aspect of the same intuitive system. Psychic technology is currently being employed in the Psychic Wars between the United States and the Soviet Union. Compared to the known and effective ancient systems (Eleusis, Isis, Shaman) of psychic ability development, the current, sterile laboratory systems of psychical research in the United States is ineffectual and the neo-Jungian claptrap of alternate science is even worse. A non-rational system will not develop under extreme rational brain hemisphere controls or Vienna circle dogmas as practiced in the U.S. programs. If the U.S. needs to develop psychic abilities like telepathy, precognition, remote viewing, etc., as military or intelligence gathering systems, then we will have to change to the appropriate environments and methods to achieve results. It appears that the Soviets have used more effective approaches and have achieved significant results in the Psychic Wars. The American establishment seems never to learn foresight from their experiences with General Billy Mitchell (aircraft), Dr. Goddard (rockets), etc. Perhaps the U.S. will be late with a technology once too often and finally pay the terminal price for its arrogance and ignorance. The next great leap forward for mankind lies waiting to be recovered from our own ancient past. Devolution can be partly reversed - both in an individual and in a nation.

[Richard Clark wrote "Revisionist Science" in CRITIQUE (issue #13/14)]

HIGH VOLTAGE AND CANCER

From the same issue of the above mentioned ASA, we find this notice - "High Voltage Power Lines Linked to Cancer and Suicide." Studies suggesting that people exposed to such magnetic fields are more likely to get leukemia or other types of cancer. These studies are generating government plans to step up research. The Department of Energy (DOE) is seeking a 23% boost in funding for research investigating the effects of high voltage transmission lines. At present there is not one federal agency that is responsible for declaring any safety standards to deal with this magnetic field problem. The EPA, which appears to have responsibility "has not been funded to carry out that mandate," according to a CONGRESSIONAL RESEARCH SERVICE report.

A study in England analyzed more than 600 suicides among a sample of the population and concluded that "significantly more suicides occurred at locations of high magnetic-field strength" near high-voltage transmission lines. (See "EMP: THE MIND FIELDS" below.)

NO MATTER

"As a man who has devoted his whole life to the most clear-headed science, to the study of matter, I can tell you as the result of my research about the atoms this much: THERE IS NO MATTER AS SUCH! All matter originates and exists only by virtue of a force which brings the particles of an atom to vibration and holds this most minute solar system of the atom together. We must assume behind this force the existence of a conscious and intelligent MIND. This mind is the matrix of all matter." — Nobel Prize winner Max Planck

MORE ON ELF (extremely low frequency) WAVES

According to Andrija Puharich, M.D., writing in ARCHAEOUS, the Soviet ELF signal is not an over-the-horizon radar, "not a new method of communicating with submarines" (perhaps a reference to McRae's MIND WARS), "but is in fact a psychoactive signal: it works on the brain." And they are very frequency-specific, i.e., the signal at about 6.6 Hz will cause depression, 11 Hz causes in human beings agitation which can lead to riotous behavior, and the signal when transmitted at 8 Hz makes one feel very good, which happens to be the alpha frequency of the brain.

The extremely low frequency signals, or magnetic waves (B-fields) range from about 6 Hz up to about 18 Hz. The Soviets use both the 6 Hz and the 11 Hz signal. Puharich and associates monitored the Soviet ELF signal for several days before the July 1977 blackout in New York City. He states that the Soviets were "aiming" very specifically at bringing a very powerful signal down the Hudson River for three days before the actual blackout and the riots occurred."

The Soviet Union has seven giant operational ELF transmitters. The US has three - in Antarctica, Australia and South Africa, but none are operational. According to Puharich, the Soviets, over the past three years, never broadcasted the 8 Hz signal - the signal that is so good and beneficial for man and all living things.

Why 8 Hz? Because the "8 Hz frequently is the spin-spin coupling constant of the hydrogen atom," or, it is what keeps the hydrogen bond stable. 7.82 Hz is present on the planet all the time. It is the frequency that has a powerful effect on living things.

He goes on to say that if the EEG of a human being is entrained (a synchronization of external pulses or waves to the inner ones, i.e., like a child sleeping with its mother will begin breathing at the same rate as the parent), either by conscious control or by artificial drivers such as photic stimulation, or by magnetic waves at 8 Hz, the human being experiences a "high." This state is a sense of extreme well being, the state that the practitioner of yoga strives to attain. The 8 Hz magnetic wave is a universal factor connecting protons in the brains with protons in the sun. He also discovered that when a healing-of-the-hands experience was taking place between Laura Huxley (Alduous' wife) and a patient, both "came into resonance by producing enormous ELF waves in their EEGs at a peak power centered on the 8 Hz frequency."

He concludes with: "it was logical to assume that precise information transfer had occurred in order to correct the organic defect in the patient." And that "if one knew how to impress thoughts upon a 8 Hz carrier wave then one could transfer other kinds of information...The question how arises as to whether the Soviets have taken this step."

CHANGES IN GLOBAL WEATHER

From the same article, Mr. Puharich addresses the question of the abnormal and anomalous nature of global weather. In the US alone, some 145 weather records were set in December of 1983. We all know this to be true, but nobody in the weather business, including analysts and forecasters, seems to want to deal with these uncanny changes and their possible ramifications.

Puharich writes of cycles of climactic changes and that Mayan history states that mankind goes through cycles of destruction, one cycle every 5,168 years. On March 27, 1981 we entered the fifth cycle (5,168 years equals 260 Jupiter-Saturn conjunctions). And at the end of every cycle is when the destruction occurs. But the Mayans are not alone in these calculations. There is astronomical data from "modern science" that complements this scenario.

In a 1975 report entitled "Understanding Climactic Changes" published by the US National Academy of Sciences, it states that there is a "repetitive glacial cycle of approximately 100,000 - 2,000 years" (90,000 years of ice and snow preceding 10,000 years of warmth). In other words, we are living at the end of an interglacial period; unparalleled warmth.

He writes of hot spots in the earth which heat the surface water which then sends up too much steam into the atmosphere which results in disturbing the entire heat engine. This heat and vapor move northward creating typhoons and weather anomalies. "This produces a mixture of excess rainfall, with all their dynamics that accompany such rainfall: typhoons, hurricanes, high-pressure areas in the northern hemisphere, and severe drought in the southern hemisphere. This is the kind of thing that is happening in the world today."

And with the volcanic activity, the dust that is thrown up gets into the thermal engine and fouls it up. This also produces more carbon dioxide in the atmosphere resulting in the greenhouse effect, where the heat rays are reflected back down. For more information on this complex matter which has been befuddling weather forecasters, see Andrija Puharich's article "Changes in Global Weather and Biological Systems, with a Review of the Biological Effects of ELF radiation from Tesla to the Present" printed in ARCHAEUS (Vol. 2, No. 1 (Fall, 1984; p. 51). ARCHAEUS is the Journal of The Archaeus Project, a private operating foundation which studies current and historical processes and techniques for the detection and measurement of bio-energetic fields - electric, magnetic and psychical - and to apply the results to the realization of human potential and to the diagnoses, treatment, and prevention of disease. They also publish a newsletter and organize mini-symposiums. Speakers at the symposiums have included: Charles Tart (of "Open Mind" newsletter), Marcello Truzzi (of the "Zetetic Scholar"), Andrija Puharich, Edward Kelly, Tom Bearden (of EXCALIBER BRIEFING), Robert Jahn (of the "Princeton Engineering Anomalies Program") and Robert Beck, among others. They sell cassette tapes of the symposium's lecturers. For more information contact Dennis Stillings, Archæus Project, 629 Twelfth Ave. S.E., Minneapolis, MN 55414.

From "The Wall Street Digest" comes these interesting notes and comments of global weather changes. Climatologist Cliff Harris summarizes the findings of research conducted by Dr. Iben Browning and the C.I.A.:

- 1) Between July 1986 and June 2005 will be the most severe weather cycle; drought will be the norm, affecting every nation
- 2) Millions of people and animals will die of starvation
- 3) The world's deserts will continue to expand at an alarming rate
- 4) America will be just one of a handful of nations to survive this harsh period
- 5) The city of Miami may see temperatures as low as 23 to 27 degrees; Southern California may see the coldest weather there in 200 years.

And, since the newsletter is a digest of "the best investment advice from the leading financial advisors" it recommends: liquidating "all agriculture investments in Florida...Invest into specialty agricultural crops, i.e., jojoba, dates, figs, pistachios, kiwis."

The following is a passage from Robert Beck's article in the aforementioned issue called "Occult Influences in Health and Disease":

"Recently, a renewed interest in 'psychotronic' technology has surfaced. This subject is highly controversial, except to medical practitioners, who deal with it professionally. Psychotronics more or less fell into disfavor in the early 1960s. Physicians and chiropractors were arrested, and their equipment was confiscated and destroyed. Raids were condoned by local district attorneys and the FDA. The mid-1970s saw a tremendous resurgence of interest, and the US Psychotronics Association emerged from underground networks..."

RESISTING INFLUENCE

Denise Winn, in her THE MANIPULATED MIND (Octagon Press; 1983; 217 pps. $15.95; via ISHK, POB 176-CR, Los Altos, CA 94022) asserts, through reams of research and investigative documentation, that we have been conditioned to escape taking responsibility for our behavior. We need to see someone else as the blame for our failures or the reason why we have succeeded. We do not want the responsibility. We want to be told what to do and we continually succumb to authorities from any and all sides, whether they be our parents, bosses, the media, friends, social peers, etc. We seem to be the only animals in the kingdom that demand so much societal approval that we'd prefer to give up our wills, our self-hood, our freedoms for that sense of approval.

In her chapter entitled "Resisting Influence" she poignantly alerts us to ways by which we can tell when the "brainwashing" is occurring or the "conversion to authority" is happening and ways to stop it. "The best way to avoid conversion of any kind is not to get emotionally involved...Once guilt, fear, and anger are stirred up, one is halfway to being won." She quotes William Sargant from his BATTLE FOR THE MIND:

The obstacles that the religious or political proselytizer cannot overcome are indifference or detached, controlled and continued amusement on the part of the subject at the efforts being made to break him down or win him over or tempt him into argument. The safety of the free world seems therefore to lie in a cultivation not only of courage, moral virtue and logic but of humour: humour which produces the well-balanced state in which emotional excess is laughed at as ugly and wasteful.

She goes on to say that humor is not only a way of keeping one's own perspectives balanced but an aid to identifying those who have no sense of perspectives. "Beware the leader of causes, salesman and experts who cannot genuinely laugh at themselves." (p.204) [See the last paragraph of Ben Price's article in this issue for a superb example of employing humor to shrug off the power elite's manipulative powers.]

Also, one should attempt to become emotionally detached and to be knowledgeable. People who are either uncertain of the facts or who accept ideas blindly are more susceptible to influence. What is needed is the cultivation of the capacity to think for ourselves, to check the facts, to ask questions, to take responsibility for the information one accepts. Discriminate between facts and opinions. Ask: Where did I get the information from and what personal interests do I have in believing or not believing certain information.

Unquestioning acceptance of partial truths may lead to erroneous beliefs. Investigating why one holds a belief protects one from being influenced. The belief in fact ceases to be fact. It is replaced by knowledge. She concludes her excellent book with:

We can't be impervious to external influences. Even the weather [and EMFs], it is now known, can affect us physiologically and emotionally, although in our ignorance, we may assume that our debility or depression is due to some other cause. Perhaps it is only by standing back, emotionally, and testing our assumptions that we can become more the masters of ourselves and correspondingly less the slaves of circumstance.

VOODOO, BELIEF SYSTEMS, AND FEAR

To continue in the same vein as the above section I located the following as I was browsing through the piles and piles of media material. This excerpt piece comes from PURSUIT. The article is called "Energy and Paranormal Phenomena" by Raymond A. Nelli (First Quarter, 1984).

Although we can powerfully affect the thoughts and actions of others, we can only do so within the limitations of others' root-belief structures. That is how voodoo works. The victims are convinced of the power of the witch doctor. They are brought up in a religious-cultist culture which powerfully affects their root-belief structures in favor of the witch doctor's power. This is all he needs. Now they are convinced that he can, with his little voodoo dolls, inflict pain, injury and suffering upon themselves, and indeed he can! They have opened the electromagnetic consciousness-linking channel between them and him [entrainment?], giving him such power by virtue of their combined belief-structures. We are not talking magic here; we are discussing very real energy operatives under conscious control of the involved entities. Such belief structures provide the very same operatives for faith-healers and lunatic-fringe cultists who would combine their energies to override that of the individual. This, also, is dangerously possible. There are other methods of amplifying consciousness-imaging energy that use crystal devices to give an individual somewhat inordinate power.

I would not want people to run around in a panic, thinking that someone who was out to get them would have them at their mercy by using such techniques. It isn't so. The greatest danger to an individual which weakens his ability to protect himself against such an attack lies in the weakness of his own belief that he may not have equal power rooted in his belief structure! The most insidious element which feeds such weakness is fear. We must fear nothing! Do not fear the corporate monopolies, the police state, some of the mindless and violent drug cultures, the lunatic-fringe groups, or death itself. All these are part of the very necessary contrasts which maintain the physical world reality wherein we exist! We will evolve beyond these points, physicality being only a portion of the transitional experience. We should enjoy the game of existence, play it as we must, and relish our little discoveries of physical reality, creation and manipulation, because this is why we are.

INFRARED AND THE EDIBLE AIR CONDITIONER

The following is a summarization of a chapter in John A. Keel's new work called STRANGE MUTANTS ($9.95; POB 20024, NYC, NY 10025-9992). John A. Keel is a Fortean who is best known for his UFOs: OPERATION TROJAN HORSE, THE EIGHTH TOWER, and THE MOTHMAN PROPHECIES.

In the chapter called "The Infrared Factor" he writes about a camera that once received publicity in the 60s but was swallowed up by the government and is used today in space satellites and U-2 spy planes. It could and did "photograph the past." For example, automobiles create an infrared "fingerprint" which "remains after they drive away," up to hours. This cloud of heat can be photographed.

Keel introduces us to this camera idea only for the purpose of exploring the fact that animals can see the infrared dimension. He goes on to write about the possibility that the strange creatures and perhaps UFOnuts have the similar capacity to see the infrared spectrum. This would "explain" why reports of assorted monsters (or "strange mutants") were attacking air conditioners and hoods of cars. Since both of these create a cloud of heat, it would only appear logical that these mutants were attacking a food source, since in the infrared spectrum living organisms are "seen" as "clouds of heat."

(You can also read "The Infrared Factor" in the latest PURSUIT issue.)

THE HITLER/OCCULT CONNECTION IS BECOMING POPULAR: WHY?

According to Dennis Passero, editor of THE CONSPIRACY TRACKER (POB 596, Paterson, NJ 07524), there is no "evidence" to allow for the reality of the Hitler/Occult connection. He's discovered for example: "Hitler closed the Masonic Lodges...the lodges of the OTO (Ordo Templi Orientis), and the Theosophical Society...All Austrians who held government posts had to take oaths that they were not members of the Freemasons or the Golden Dawn...According to Dennis Wheatley, one of the greatest experts on the occult, there is no evidence linking Hitler to the occult." So, Passero concludes with: "Hitler's war was a war against the occult - and the purpose of these books [that make the Hitler/Occult connection claim] is to bolster the rapidly deflating belief in the [Jewish] Holocaust by presenting Hitler as a Satanist. After all, if Hitler were a Satanist, then the belief in the murdered 6 million is more believable."

EMF: THE MIND FIELDS

It's a bit coincidental that after writing the brief piece on ELF, my latest February issue of OMNI arrived. In it there is an excellent piece called "The Mind Fields" by Kathleen McAuliffe which explores the field of electromagnetism (or EMF). She investigates its positive and adverse effects on organisms, cells, and human behavior. EMF is being used by medical practitioners, surgeons, therapists and the military. I applaud OMNI for finally coming out with an overview of this often misunderstood and too-frequently obscure subject. And author Kathleen McAuliffe should be complimented for her efforts and courage since "a number of sources predicted the government might try to discredit me; that my life, even might be endangered...maybe they're all paranoid. But emotions are running high."

The following is a summarization of the article:

Remember Jose Delgado, the researcher who worked with electrode implants in the brain effective enough to make a charging bull halt at the activation of the electrode by radio signal? Well, now he's involved with EMF and its effects on animal behavioral changes. Electromagnetic fields include invisible emanations from TV and radio transmitting towers, VHF radio antennas, AC power lines, VDTs (Video Display Terminals or computer monitors), police radars, the earth, and human beings, among others.

Delgado's team of researchers have discovered that they can: 1) pacify fighting fish, 2) thwart the growth of bacteria, 3) speed the healing of rat's bone fractures and change the migratory movement of snails - all under the influence of different electromagnetic fields. They've discovered, also, that chick embryo's incubated in the EMFs became grossly deformed and fruit flies suffered from genetic mutation.

With his study of an isolated crab neuron, Delgado discovered that the neuron changed its firing rate to synchronize with the applied pulses. This is called entrainment. A researcher in Loma Linda, California, W. Ross Adey, has shown how brain waves tend to become "locked" in with that of the external EMF waves.

"Electromagnetism has grown up under a cloud of controversy and intrigue." (See Robert Beck's quote above in this regard.)

EMFs are being used to regulate arrhythmic hearts, i.e., a patent pending device for the first wireless pacemaker using EMF was created by Dr. Elizabeth Rauscher, president of Technic Research Laboratories, in San Leandro, California (she is also Board member of the PARAPSYCHOLOGY RESEARCH GROUP which publishes PSI RESEARCH [reviewed in the last issue of CRITIQUE]). In 1979 the FDA approved an EM coil to be used to aid in the healing of bone fractures and which stimulates growth of new blood vessels to save diseased hips. These coils have been used for healing severe burns, long-standing diabetic ulcers, skin wounds, and tendonitis.

VDT emissions are similar to those weak signals given to the chick embryos in Delgado's experiments. Robert Tell of the EPA (Environmental Protection Agency) believes that more exploration in this entire field is definitely needed. The FDA intends to issue a revised policy statement on VDTs [see "High Voltage and Cancer" in this Potpourri section].

Russian literature contains thousands of reports of harmful effects at exposure levels the US government assures us as safe, including headaches, loss of appetite and fatigue - called the asthenia syndrome. US corporations view such workplace "complaints" as subjective and

"insufficient" evidence. Americans set tolerance levels for microwave exposure at 1,000 times greater than what the Russians consider safe. (It's strange to think that Russia, being such an economically "backward" country with "dictatorial" policies would be so "soft" on its citizens when it comes to not only "subjective" complaints but from fields that are "invisible." What do they know that we don't?)

American government scientists refuted the Russian claims of EMF mental health adverse influences. But now reports of the biological hazards of EMF low intensity influence have increased in frequency in Western literature, i.e., exposure to simulated power line fields increase cancer cells, cause immunological stress and leukemia, etc.

Says Dr. Robert O. Becker, orthopedic surgeon and EMF practitioner, "[I]f you look at the strength of the findings as a whole across the world literature ... you have to conclude that we've got one hell of a problem." According to Paul Brodeur in his THE ZAPPING OF AMERICA (1976), the reason why there has been serious omissions of data from the government and no funds for serious research, especially with epidemiological studies, is because the health implications it raised often conflicted with national defense interests and the expansion of technology, i.e., military and corporate allies (two-thirds of all support for research on biological effects of microwaves comes from the military [hardly a disinterested party]). Lobbying groups have been created to stop legislation for establishing safety standards for the use of VDTs. CBEMA (the Computer and Business Equipment Manufacturers Association) represents 42 of the largest computer and business machine makers in the US). The Coalition for Workplace Technology counters the press's alleged misinformation on VDTs. The EEPA (Electronic Energy Policy Alliance [made up of AT&T, Raytheon and others]) is a major opponent to an EPA proposal that would limit the emissions of radio and TV transmitting towers to levels ten times lower than present voluntary guidelines.

With all this lobbying power and potential for a panic situation, scientists and researchers are retreating from exposing the threat of EMF, according to Rochelle Medici, an EMF researcher.

According to Russian colleagues, living organisms are extremely sensitive to the earth's geomagnetic field. And that the earth's daily fluctuations serve as a time-piece that regulates body rhythms at the rate at which DNA replicates within cells. It's only logical that EMF contaminants of the natural magnetic field should disrupt everything from behavior to health. The Russians fear it could have the "cataclysmic impact of a geomagnetic field reversal!"

So, what is the impact of that rising sea of radiation that has existed only for 50 of the 3.4 billion years of life on this planet? According to Dr. Becker, "if we continue to fill the air waves with endless new frequency broadcast channels, we can look forward to increased evidence of cancer, birth defects, cerebral nervous system abnormalities and maybe the extinction of life."

For those of you who remember when the Soviets beamed weak microwaves at the US embassy in Moscow where three ambassadors came down with cancer (see CRITIQUE #4, "New Mind Control Weapons" by Edith Kermit Roosevelt), the American government still has not disclosed the motivation for the Moscow signal. Even with the FOIA, the documents have been so sanitized to be regarded as useless.

So, the same old story but with new faces: government tells the public one thing - that microwaves are fine - while secretly conducting studies to test the assertions, i.e., a top-secret project code named "Pandora" exposed primates to microwaves similar to the Moscow signal at the US embassy. The results of the blood study remain classified. However, after ten days of 24 hour exposure to the simulated Moscow emission, one monkey fell into a deep stupor and could not be roused until more than three days later, when the power was finally cut off. This propelled the State Department to test human volunteers but in mid-stream dropped the line of inquiry due to flaws in the experimental design. So they say. A popular countertheory is that the government attempted to cover-up health effects since many expensive radar sets would have to be redesigned.

To appease the staff members of the US embassy in Moscow, the State Department provided a 20% salary increase and nailed aluminum shielding to the side of the building. When asked about the Moscow affair, Samuel Koslov, the leading government investigator of the affair, said, "No one knows for certain what it was used for. But we have pretty good suspicions, which I'm not at liberty to discuss. They have nothing, however, to do with biology or psychology." When queried about the possibility of brain manipulation, he responded with, "We have never really looked at that in this country." However, Eldon Byrd at the Naval Surface Weapons Center disagrees. Between January 1981 and September of 1982 the Navy commissioned Byrd to investigate the potential for developing EM devices for "riot control, hostage removal, embassy and ship security, clandestine operations, and so on." Remote manipulation of the mind was one of the possibilities explored. The project wasn't well-funded nor continued officially past 1982.

The Navy's Paul Tyler: "I don't think most people in government perceive that there could be a threat in this area...With the right EMF you might be able to produce the same effects as psychoactive drugs."

A Russian machine called the LIDA appears to do just that (Is this one of the seven ELF machines Puharich was referring to? See "More on ELF Waves" in this Potpourri section.) It generates pulsed radio frequencies in conjunction with other sensory stimuli to induce deep sleep. W. Ross Adey, a neuroscientist at the VA Hospital in Loma Linda, California and the only investigator in the US to test the machine, has been quoted as saying, "Some people theorize that the Soviets may be using an advanced version of the machine clandestinely to seek a change in behaviors in the United States through signals beamed from the USSR."

THE PAPER PLAGUE

The following summarization comes from an article in the Nov. 1984 issue of Graphic Arts Monthly entitled "Our Endangered Forests" by Bert Chapman.

Demand for coated stock for every sort of insert and catalog imaginable has created a short supply crunch in paper. Nature has encroached on the pulpwood and commercial timberlands. The Mt. St Helens eruption devastated tremendous amounts of woodland. Fires across Montana have charred one quarter million acres of forests and rangeland. And a mysterious plague is killing off timber from New England to the Deep South.

Similar catastrophes have killed millions of acres of timber in Europe and the Soviet Union. According to one paper consultant, "The trees are losing their vitality and resistance to insects and disease and we're still not absolutely sure why."

Some species of trees are being dwarfed, deformed and some have simply stopped growing. The plague is not confined to one specific area. Botanists believe it could be acid rain, "All we really know is that something unusual is happening."

In Germany, at least 1/3 of the forests have been afflicted by stalled growth. In Switzerland, the forests are diminishing. A forest pathologist blames it on air pollution. "Mountains are like combs. As the clouds drift by the foliage sifts out pollution particles. The result: pollution levels that equal or exceed those on the city streets."

UFO - F.O.I.A.

Back in 1979 Ground Saucer Watch (GSW), a US organization of several hundred scientists and engineers investigating UFOs, filed a suit against the CIA under the FOIA. They were seeking UFO-related CIA documents, which at first the CIA denied it had and then sought to withhold the documents on "national security" grounds. The CIA was ordered to turn over most of the documents, about 10,000 additional papers were to be delivered. Several highly-classified documents are still in litigation.

According to William Spaulding, Director of GSW, "after reviewing the documents, the government has been lying to us. We believe that UFOs exist...and the cover-up is massive."

Reporter Tom Bearden, of the article from which this summary is taken, says that the CIA, with its all pervasive debunking ideology, was very effective in "educating" the news media and the scientific community. Perhaps this is why a large percentage of UFO reports are now ignored. In Bearden's words: official policy was "Delude the American public by deliberate manipulation and management of information releases to protect us idiots from the knowledge of what was really occurring."

The GSW is still after information, and the hard-core material they believe may be contained in the 57 items the CIA still refuses to hand over. "This material is believed to include motion pictures, gun camera film, and residue from landings of UFOs in vehicular format." (See Thomas Bearden's "CIA/Government UFOs Cover-up Revealed" in SPECULA (Vol. 1, No. 4; p.9) - The Journal of the American Association of Meta Science (POB 1182, Huntsville, AL 35807).

"History is the lies agreed upon by the victims." — Napoleon

For a most interesting compilation and update of UFO information write to the Cambridge UFO Research Group, c/o Bonnie Wheeler, 2 Augusta St., Cambridge, Ontario, Canada N1R 1G1. In each issue or package Ms. Wheeler reprints articles from newspapers, the "Flying Saucer Review," "Search" magazine; releases from CUFOS and MUFON (Center for UFO Studies and the Mutual UFO Network); prints unusual letters from subscribers, cartoons, photos of "aliens."

One such flyer she attached to her packet was from the William Moore Publications and Research. One such document that he sells that caught my eye (especially after I just wrote about it in "UFO and FOIA") is "Selected Documents from the Files of the US Army Intelligence (1947-1955). It's a 70 page report for $8.50; a selection of representative documents from the recently declassified 900 page "Unconventional Aircraft" file from Army Intelligence. As William Moore writes: "This collection is evidence that the US Army was more involved in the collection of UFO data than most researchers previously suspected. One significant document indicates that after the study, 80% of the reported sightings remain unidentified." Also, much of the information from Army Intelligence lists both the NSA and the CIA on their distribution lists - a clear indication that the National Security Agency was interested in receiving reports from the very beginning. (For more information on the NSA, which is claimed to be more powerful and secret than the CIA, see "NSA" in CRITIQUE, Issue #2). For a catalog of his publications write to W.L.M. - P&R, 4219 Olive St. #247, Burbank, CA 91505. [See also the interview with J. Allen Hynek in the February issue of OMNI.]

SKY CRASH: A COSMIC COVER-UP

We just received Robert Girard's Arcturus Book Service Catalog. Robert Girard contributed "The Ultimate Cover-Up" in CRITIQUE #13/14. In the latest catalog he briefly reviews what appears to be a very hot book (one can only reserve the book until it arrives from the publisher). The book is called SKY CRASH: A COSMIC COVER-UP by Brenda Butler, Dot Street and Jenny Randles (Spearman; 1984; HC, 286 pp; $13.95). The following is a reprint of his short review.

Someone recently quipped that the Rendlesham Forest case was "the only game in town" these days. In a sense this is true, for this 1980 incident has caused not a few UFOlogists to drop everything in order to concentrate exclusively on it, and it certainly ranks as one of the most important and potentially explosive cases in many years. Aspects of the case include a UFO landing, military/intelligence brainwashing, possible alien contact with military officials, possible repairs of a UFO utilizing equipment supplied by the military (isn't it interesting to consider that the US military may carry a spare-parts inventory of UFOs!) as well as the usual obfuscations and cover-ups. It may prove far more important to discover what this incident tells us about the structure of government (which would appear is not what we are taught as schoolchildren) than about the structure of UFOs! SKY CRASH is one of the most important UFO books ever published. The UFO information, and the struggle of the authors to obtain what they did alone makes fascinating reading to be sure - but also I again emphasize that the book is enough to cause us to wonder about the nature of present-day governments, and whether or not a usurpation of power has taken place since WW II, in which control has shifted from elected officials to super-secret enclaves buried within super secret agencies, with super-secret power to control any one of us if necessary. [Write to Arcturus for a catalog of their UFO/unusual books and publications: 263 N. Ballston Ave., Scotia, NY 12302.]

ECONOMIC BRIEFS

1. Revamp the FDIC? — The following comes from an article in the local news called "Tighter Bank Policy Studied" (Press Democrat; 1/12/85):

A working group of the Cabinet Council on Economic Affairs are "recommending that banks and saving institutions be required to maintain a larger share of assets and to revamp the deposit insurance system (FDIC) for the first time in 51 years." The official study, at the time of this writing (1/18/85) has been held up due to giving the incoming Treasury Secretary an opportunity to review it. A summary, however, concludes "there is concern that the economic changes and the potential increase in riskiness of large institutions may threaten the ability of the insurance fund to fulfill their goals." One suggestion was that banks have a sliding scale with regards to insurance rates, i.e., institutions with a higher proportion of "bad loans" would have to pay a higher percentage than a conservative one.

Banks have been getting sloppy and have been failing (more banks failed in the first half of 1984 than in all of 1983) - so now the government needs to step in and admits that the FDIC is useless. We all knew it was ridiculous; but now that the government is coming out publicly and stating its "concern" that the riskiness of banks "may threaten the ability of the insurance funds to fulfill their goals," then perhaps we should listen to what they have to say. I'm curious to see what kind of band-aid methods of government will be employed to convince, or reconvince or comfort us to the banking system's "stability."

2. Banks are buying insurance against default by Third World debtors. But a Federal Bailout is a possibility in case of an insurance failure (which means the taxpayers pay).

3. The new currency which we wrote about in the last issue has already been printed. And, according to Gary North of REMNANT REVIEW, it is being "field tested" in Santa Ana, California, in order to understand public reaction.

4. Based on current Salomon Brothers surveys, rare coins have been rated as the #1 investment over the past ten years with a compound annual return of 21.4%

The above information, except for #1, comes from "The Larsen File" (Jan./Feb. 1985). Also in that particular issue comes the following story:

CIVILIZATION ON MARS?

According to a Soviet scientist, who defected to the West, due to the Soviet's development of the Star Wars program, photographs from an orbiting satellite show the ruined temples of a long-dead civilization on Mars. They show a city three times the size of Moscow, "ringed by wide boulevards...linked together by smaller ones, like the spokes of a cart-wheel. The temples must have been huge. Most are in ruins...The Soviet Union will never admit to this incredible discovery because it would reveal too much of their technological progress." Write to "The Larsen File," POB 4080, Torrance, CA 90510.

MARIJUANA: A LARGE CASH CROP

Marijuana, or sinsemilla, is the hottest crop in Humboldt County, California. It is one of California's largest cash crops, worth an estimated $2 billion a year. From Seattle to Washington, DC smokers talk about the "Humboldt High" and are willing to pay at least $2,000 a pound for it.

You wouldn't know it was illegal because the townspeople of Garberville (the "hub of its weedy genesis") and government leaders are acquiescent about the whole affair. The grocery sells thousands of clippers used for cultivating the marijuana. Garden supply stores sell miles of plastic pipe for irrigation and enough fertilizer to dam the Eel River. Children help out during harvest, getting paid $100 a manicured pound. Says a local real estate agent, "There's a point where the money is just irresistible...When they come in here with cash, we don't ask 'Where'd you get this money'."

The person whose governmental position is akin to being a mayor has said, "This is a market area that supplies a product...They're talented, hard-working, naive, and not violent [only 1 marijuana related shooting death has occurred in 1984 in Humboldt County]. I'd love to see them turn their talents to pinot noir grapes or kiwis."

Raids by police authorities cost the city, county, and the state $10,000 a day. It's too expensive to make arrests so the idea is to "discourage growing by confiscation and destruction." In 1984 authorities seized 500 tons of marijuana plants worth about $350 million. (Information comes from a WASHINGTON POST/WEEKLY story; Dec. 10, 1984; p.31)

THE LEFT CRITICIZES ISRAEL

"...American aid to and support for Israel and its annexationist policies cannot be taken as innocent, nor can the military enforcers of that policy be viewed as bystanders...[A]s the War escalates in the Middle East and the US role deepens, it is inevitable that attacks on US targets will proliferate...[we have seen a development from ambassadors being targeted to demonstrations and occupations of embassies and massive armed attacks against embassies and military installations] All of these developments can be seen as developments which parallel US support for Israeli policies. This year the Reagan administration is considering emergency aid of at least $1 billion on top of $2.6 billion already approved by Congress for the new "unity" government of Prime Minister Shimon Peres. Far more than half of that aid is earmarked for military use.

Additionally, the Reagan administration is fashioning its policies -in military training, in criminal law, and even in constitutional theory - on Israeli models. There is simply no comprehension by the US government of the fact that adopting Israel's 'ten eyes for an eye' rhetoric and military policy will assure the US's future as a legitimate target of the national aspirations of the victims of Israeli aggression."

The article mentions the Jonathan Institute which is a joint US-Israeli organization founded in 1979. "Little doubt remains after reviewing the [Jonathan Institute] conference literature and speeches...that the US has accepted Israel's proposition, that virtually the entire Islamic world and anyone else who questions Israel's occupation of her neighbors' territory, is a terrorist or terrorist supporter." (This passage was excerpt from an article entitled "Pentagon Moves on 'Terrorism'" by Ellen Ray and Bill Schaap in COVERT ACTION (Fall, 1984; p.4)

The Return of the Baal

A Metaphysical Exploration of Global Events

by Jay Kinney

Again, you take the widespread revival in the Third Reich of the cult of Wotan. Who was Wotan? God of wind. Take the name "Sturmabteilung"—Storm Troops. Storm, you see—the wind. Just as the swastika is a revolving form making a vortex moving ever toward the left—which means in Buddhist symbolism sinister, unfavorable, directed towards the unconscious.

"And all these symbols together of a Third Reich led by its prophet under the banners of wind and storm and whirling vortices point to a mass movement which is to sweep the German people in a hurricane of unreasoning emotion on and on to a destiny which perhaps none but the seer, the prophet, the Fuhrer himself can foretell—and perhaps, not even he. — C.G. Jung, Jan. 1939

General John W. Vessey Jr., chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has urged audiences at many prayer breakfasts around the country to "enlist in God's army." At one breakfast he led repeated cheers: "Hurrah for God!"

Admiral James D. Watkins, the chief of naval operations, declares in speeches that "I am a moral man" and blames the deaths of 241 Marines and other U.S. servicemen in the 1983 Beirut bombing on the "forces of the ANTI-CHRIST." — "Religion is Gaining Rank at the Pentagon" S.F. Chronicle, Jan. 3, 1985

*And the club danced in Baal's hands, like a vulture from his fingers.
It struck Prince Sea on the skull,
Judge River between the eyes. Sea stumbled:
he fell to the ground his joints shook his frame collapsed Baal captured and drank Sea he finished off Judge River. Astarte shouted Baal's name:
"Hail, Baal the Conqueror!
hail, Rider on the Clouds! For Prince Sea is our captive, Judge River is our captive.
— the myth of Baal and the Waters Ugarit, Canaan, 14th century B.C.*

Extreme times call for extreme descriptions. Granted, the map is not the territory, nevertheless those without a map are far likelier to fall victim to the geography of their times. Yet, given the inadequacy of the "official" maps offered by the would-be tour-guides in New York and Washington D.C. skeptical enquirers in search of the path through the labyrinth must make do with theories and flow-charts of their own eccentric production. Is it possible to develop a coherent overview of the present geopolitical terrain by drawing only upon marginal and non-expert sources—sources untainted by the need to kowtow to received knowledge or academic norms? It is worth a try, for the popular culture of a civilization—the supermarket tabloids, the TV commercials, and the folk ephemera—often offer us the truest accounts of the current temper. Let us proceed.

In trying to account for the piles of bodies which tower ever higher in Central America as well as the general mood of glee in the U.S. in the aftermath of Reagan's lightning-quick invasion of Grenada, it is perhaps mythologically useful to posit the resurfacing in the Americas of the archetype of the ancient god of Baal, in much the same way that Jung suggested that Wotan was resurfacing in Germany in the era of Nazi advances.

Baal, as you may recall, was one of the chief gods of Canaan/Phoenicia and a rival of Yahweh for the attentions of the Jewish tribes who made their way out of Egypt to Canaan. Besides being a fertility god, Baal—sometimes known as Hadad—was also the god of thunder and lightning. The prophet Elijah spent much time during the 9th century B.C. battling Baal worship among the Jews. This conflict is popularly portrayed as a religious war, but there are other intriguing interpretations.

For instance, give a glance to this passage from the Book of Urantia, that phone directory of prehistory and cosmology supposedly dictated by ultraterrestrials on higher rungs of the evolutionary ladder:

The long-drawn-out controversy between the believers in Yahweh and the followers of Baal was a socioeconomic clash of ideologies rather than a difference in religious belief.

The inhabitants of Palestine differed in their attitude toward private ownership of land. The southern or wandering Arabian tribes (the Yahwehites) looked upon land as an inalienable—as a gift of Deity to the clan. They held that land could not be sold or mortgaged. Yahweh spoke saying, "The land shall not be sold for the land is mine."

The northern and more settled Canaanites (the Baalites) freely bought, sold, and mortgaged their lands. The word Baal means owner. The Baal cult was founded on two major doctrines: First, the validation of property exchange, contracts, and covenants—the right to buy and sell land. Second, Baal was supposed to send rain—he was a god of fertility of the soil. Good crops depended on the favor of Baal. The cult was largely concerned with land, its ownership and fertility.

In general, the Baalites owned houses, land, and slaves. They were the aristocratic landlords and lived in the cities. Each Baal had a sacred place, a priesthood, and the "holy women," the ritual prostitutes. Out of this basic difference in the regard for land, there evolved the bitter antagonisms of social, economic, moral, and religious attitudes exhibited by the Canaanites and the Hebrews. This socioeconomic controversy did not become a definite religious issue until the times of Elijah...

Elijah shifted the Yahweh-Baal controversy from the land issue to the religious aspect of Hebrew and Canaanite ideologies. When Ahab murdered the Naboths in the intrigue to get possession of their land, Elijah made a moral issue out of the olden land mores and launched his vigorous campaign against the Baalites. This was also a fight of the country folk against domination by the cities...The prophet began as an agrarian reformer and ended up by exalting Deity. Baals were many, Yahweh was one—monotheism won over polytheism.
[page 1064]

At the risk of belaboring a point which may be already clear to those readers with a talent for jumping to conclusions, let's look at some of the parallels between this Old Testament conflict and present U.S. actions south of the border:

The worshipers of Baal were urban and lived in the north.

The U.S. is predominantly urban and resides in the northern hemisphere.

The Yahwehites lived to the south and were country folk.

The Third World (especially Central and Latin American) is to our south and is mainly peasant.

MIND CONTROL IN THE UNITED STATES

Steven Jacobson

with an Introduction by Antony C. Sutton

"Steven Jacobson has tackled an important and neglected issue, hypnotic mind control, and presented it in the context of a ruling class/conspiracy analysis of our society. Mr. Jacobson is at his best in elucidating the mechanisms of hypnotic and subliminal suggestion. He also successfully debunks the common disinformation that hypnotism cannot be coercive or doesn't function without the voluntary consent of the subject." — Peter E. McAlpine, author of The Occult Technology of Power and former editor of Conspiracy Digest

"A guided tour — conducted in the most conscious, sober style conceivable — of the subliminal seductions that daily batter our resistance. — Marian Kester, free-lance writer and regular contributor to Critique — A Journal of Conspiracies and Metaphysics

"MIND CONTROL IN THE UNITED STATES will increase your sense of skepticism when it comes to the establishment and its representatives...You do have a duty to freedom to find the truth and spread the truth. Jacobson's book will be invaluable in this task. At least you will know who tried to brainwash you and how they tried." — Antony C. Sutton, from the Introduction

TO ORDER SIMPLY SEND $4.95 PLUS $1.50 (SHIPPING & HANDLING)
TO CRITIQUE PUBLISHING, P.O. BOX 11451, SANTA ROSA, CA 95406.
PUB DATE IS MAY/JUNE 1985. ADVANCED ORDERS ARE ENCOURAGED. MAKE CHECKS AND/OR MONEY ORDERS PAYABLE TO "CRITIQUE."

The ancient Baal-Jehovah battle pitted country folks against cities of aristocratic landlords who emphasized contracts and covenants.

The struggle in Latin America for agrarian reform and justice pits poor rural populations against the IMF, U.S. banks, and their local surrogates who demand strict cleaving to loan agreements and corporate property rights.

The Hebrews were inspired and berated in their struggles with Baal by the Prophets Moses and Elijah.

Influenced by liberation theology, the peasant "base communities" of Central and Latin America are inspired in many cases by the reading of scripture—particularly the Old Testament stories of Moses and other prophets.

How far one wants to pursue this line of inquiry may depend on how far one is willing to associate Baal with evil and project that value onto modern America and capitalism. The following comments on the religion of the Canaanites from Halley's Bible Handbook illustrate this dilemma:

Baal was their principal god; Ashtoreth, Baal's wife, their principal goddess. She was the personification of the reproductive principle in nature. Ishtar was her Babylonian name; Astarte her Greek and Roman name... Temples of Baal and Ashtoreth were usually together. Priestesses were temple prostitutes. Sodomites were male temple prostitutes. The worship of Baal, Ashtoreth, and other Canaanite gods consisted in the most extravagant orgies; their temples were centers of vice... (p. 166)

Regarding archaeological excavations at Gezer in the Canaanite stratum (undertaken in 1904-09) Halley notes the finding of a temple to Baal and Ashtoreth:

Under the debris, in this "High Place," [Halley's quotation marks] Macalister found great numbers of jars containing the remains of children who had been sacrificed to Baal. The whole area proved to be a cemetery for new-born babies...

Also, in this "High Place," under the rubbish, Macalister found enormous quantities of images and plaques of Ashtoreth and rudely exaggerated sex organs, designed to foster sensual feelings.

So Canannites worshipped, by immoral indulgence, as a religious rite, in the presence of their gods; and then, by murdering their first-born children, as a sacrifice to these same gods... [pp. 166-7]

Halley's conservative Christian morality colors his evaluation of these elements of Baal worship, and his conclusions derived from 1909 have been superseded by more recent archaeological digs and research. For instance, he asserts easily that the images of Ashtoreth were "designed to foster sensual feelings" although this concept has more to do with the modern manner of looking at ancient primal images than with the images' function in their own cultural setting.

Nevertheless, the parallels between Halley's depiction of Baal worship and certain phenomena in contemporary America are striking:

The media periodically carry stories about callgirls and sex with Congressional aides in the halls of Congress, portraying these latterday temples of Baal as "centers of vice."

Within the past two years there was the news report of a Los Angeles abortion clinic found storing hundreds of jars of fetuses—a grim sight even for supporters of the right to abort.

The proliferation of pornography and of sex goddesses—porn queens—"rudely" displaying sex organs is commonplace.

The sending off of American soldiers to die in Third World wars (Vietnam, Lebanon, et al.) can be interpreted as a sacrifice of the first-born children.

In constructing this alternate reading of the contemporary U.S. some serious questions have to be dealt with. Jung's suggestion that Nazi Germany was witnessing the re-emergence of the Wotan archetype from the German racial unconscious posited a national predisposition towards the expression of deep psychological forces in an inimitably Germanic manner. Given America's boiling pot nature, it is difficult to identify a single racial or cultural archetype which would express the eruption of the American unconscious in as unambiguous a way. Why Baal then? Why a local god (or gods) identified with ancient Canaan of all places?

A volume of revisionist history in the Von Daniken mode, Gods of the Cataclysm, by Hugh Fox (1976, Dorset Press, N.Y.) offers one clue. Fox theorizes that Central and Latin America were visited and populated in ancient times by immigrants from India, on the one hand, and the Phoenicians, on the other. Fox makes much of parallels between the Aztec, Mayan, and Incan pantheons and symbols and their counterparts in Phoenicia (Canaan). He notes the shift from a prehistoric and benevolent Great Mother-worshipping matriarchy to the ascent of the stern sky-gods and angry goddesses of more modern times and attributes this shift to a worldwide "cataclysm" chronicled in numerous Flood myths. Notes Fox:

Then came the cataclysm and the benign, benevolent, life-giving Magna Mater, Mother of the heavens and Earth, became malevolent, destructive, demonic. The Death-Mother Goddesses arose, like the Indian Kali, or the Greek Gorgon, or, a much less demonic, much less destructive but nevertheless still angry Anat. (Baal's consort)...

The goddesses changed into concretizations of the cataclysm itself. The benign, stable cosmos had turned capriciously malignant and in the train of this cosmological happening, the whole iconology of woman changed.

The fear and anger attributed to the goddesses by their human creatures, of course, came from the apprehension that the cataclysm, in its multiple aspects of fire, floods, and earthquakes, was not over and that it was just a question of time before the next cataclysm struck and the destruction began all over again. Anat's fear is that the cosmos is aligned against her and Baal, that the universe itself is death bent, thundering toward absolute sterility, antilife. The core of Phoenician religion stems from the fact of the Great Cataclysm: It is a religion of hysteria, desperately strengthening and supporting Life/Fertility by feeding the fertility gods, AnatTanit and Baal Haman with blood. to the Phoenician mind, whether in Syria-Palestine or North Africa, their whole sacrificial system was based on an attempt to prevent another—and final—Great Cataclysm. This was the exact same rationale [Fox's emphasis] behind the dynamics of the Aztec world...

...[Fox notes:]...I couldn't help thinking that what I had encountered with the Aztecs—a whole world dedicated to staving off the next and last cosmic disaster by offering victims to the sun—wasn't something that had been spontaneously generated by a New world witnessing the cataclysm itself but instead, was a transplant of Phoenician (most specifically Carthaginian) religion in the fullness of its complex eschatology. [pp. 180-3]

Let's leave aside for now the question of Fox's credibility as an amateur historian and see where his theory takes us. Even if his posing of a direct historical link between Canaan and Mesoamerica doesn't hold water, Fox's imaginative depiction of the hysteria fueling Canaanite/Aztec sacrifices strikes a certain responsive chord in view of the widespread contemporary fear of an imminent nuclear holocaust. Western Civilization has seen two of the worst cataclysms of all time, World Wars I and II, within this century, and the fiery climax of Hiroshima provided a vision of "another—and final—Great Cataclysm" still to come. Small wonder that, in terms of the collective unconscious, time has been telescoped back to the moment when Fertility gods and goddesses were being hysterically transformed into War gods and goddesses in response to a seemingly hostile universe. Subjectively, this sound like the story of the Baby Boom generation in a nutshell.

To review for a moment, I am not suggesting that an actual malevolent god has been somehow revived and is being knowingly worshipped by individuals who plot the murder of scores of innocents. I'll leave that scenario to Ghostbusters. Rather, I am examining the possibility that certain configurations of psychic energy residing in the depths of our collective unconscious have been recently surfacing in response to the extreme tensions and conflicts of the times. In an interview conducted shortly after World War II Jung referred to these forces as "man's own inner powers projected into the outside world." He conjectured that these "demons" which were previously seen in Nature and dealt with there through ritual and other means had been gradually taken back into man as modern science de-demonized Nature, with the result that man's unconscious was now unhealthily loaded with them. Jung noted that "under National Socialism, the pressure of the demons became so great that they got human beings into their power and blew them up into lunatic supermen, first of all Hitler who then infected the rest..."

Despite Jung's 1939 description of this "demonic possession" as Wotan-inspired, it was not his intention to imply that it was peculiar to the German people. On the contrary, as he noted in 1945 following Germany's defeat:

...[T]he demons are not banished, that is a difficult task that still lies ahead. Now that the angel of history has abandoned the Germans, the demons will seek a new victim. And that won't be difficult. Every man who loses his shadow, every nation that falls into self-righteousness, is their prey... The Germans will recover when they admit their guilt and accept it; but the others will become victims of possession if, in their horror at the German guilt, they forget that exactly the same fatal tendency to collectivization is present in the victorious nations as in the Germans, that they can just as suddenly become a victim of the demonic powers. — C.G. Jung Speaking, p. 154

In his association of the "demonic possession" with "collectivization" Jung was not indulging in a reactionary demonology per se, but criticizing all tendencies towards what might better be termed "massification." He saw these inner "demons" as preferring rootless, mass man as their target, and suggested that "the most modern media of mass suggestion—press, radio, film, etc.—are at their service." And this was in 1945! One can imagine what Jung would have made of such spontaneous patriotic exercises as the repetitive chanting of "U—S—A!!" at the '84 Summer Olympics, or the now eerily ubiquitous addressing of TV commercials to some mythical collective viewer known cheerily as "America!"

Possession of the Germans did not occur all at once but proceeded incrementally over a number of years, with numerous incidents illustrating the progress of the phenomena. Looking back over our own recent past, the mid-70's Cattle Mutilation scare may be seen as one such signpost. A newly-published exhaustive investigation of the mutilations, Mute Evidence by Daniel Kagan and Ian Summers (Bantam, 1984) makes a convincing argument for viewing the mutilations as primarily a case of mass hysteria built up around a few genuine mutilations and the subsequent misinterpretation of predator-disfigured cattle deaths. For our purposes, the issue of the mutilations' origin is moot. What is significant is their appearance in the wake of Watergate and other blows to America's self-image. Also keep in mind that the ancient Canaan myths sometimes portrayed Baal and Ashtoreth as Bull and Cow.

Lt. Col. Thomas Bearden (Ret.), an unorthodox proponent of alternative energy theories, borrowed the term "tulpoids" from the Tibetans in this description of the mutilation phenomena as projections of our inner demons:

The cattle mutilations are materialized precognitive nightmares indicating the horror of the Armageddon to come, and these nightmarish paranormal mutilations reveal the true nature of the times...

In ancient times the wise men knew how to do a metaphysical analysis of the species unconscious, and knew that tulpoidal phenomena were often symbolic signs of that which was to come...

It is also not accidental that a human culture seeks and 'obtains' a godform or god-image consistent with its own level of understanding and belief; the resulting tulpoidal activity conditioned into the collective unconscious and the cultural unconscious, and tuned in from them, will be consistent with the cultural desires and expectations.

So in a sense we are the creators of our own reality and our own tulpoidal expressions of higher reality. But in addition to tulpoids, the present character of spacetime and dimensionality, and the very laws of the physical universe, are largely prescribed by the collective human unconscious. — The Excalibur Briefing, pp. 97, 192

Bearden's willingness to give credit to the collective unconscious for the creation of "spacetime, dimensionality, and the very laws of the physical universe" as we know it, goes much farther than I'm prepared to argue here. However, a similar interpretation of the give and take of consciousness and reality, this one courtesy of the neo-Crowleyan Cincinnati Journal of Ceremonial Magick, is worth relating as it dovetails back into the Baal theory proposed at the start of this article.

A ceremonial magician known as Nema has written at length in the CJCM about her channeled revelations which include, in part, information about what she calls, echoing eldritch fantasy writer H.P. Lovecraft, "the Elder Gods." Nema relates that these entities from "beyond" our Universe fed off of and utilized the collective energy of our species' survival instincts during a span of ancient pre-history. Agents of a higher Intelligence eventually banished the Elder Gods "to their own realm and the Gateway was sealed. Since the Manhattan Project, however, the seal was dissolved. These alien entities are presently preparing for another attempt in 'our' Universe." According to Nema, what is drawing these alien entities back is the suffering of the millions of poverty-stricken, undernourished humans on Earth.

The Forgotten Ones have access to Man on the Astral planes, mainly in the dream-state. Those sections of humanity who exist in starvation conditions, in poverty that has practically negated civilized consciousness, are the hunger-gates of the Forgotten Ones. These starvelings have thin, if indeed any, barriers between the waking (reason) and dreaming (primal drive) states.

Their physical strength may be too depleted for the bearing of arms, but theirs is the massed power of the Forgotten Ones. The demon-conflicts of the fortunate nations (the "chosen of the bright gods"), are petty when compared with the dark powers gathering within the hunger of the starving.

With a forbearance worthy of Jung himself, Nema doesn't propose an all-out battle with the Elder Gods/Forgotten Ones, since this would, in many ways, boil down to a war with ourselves. Rather, she prescribes a delicate balancing act to be undertaken by magicians like herself in order to set matters aright:

The Task here is to channel and direct, under strict control of Will, the presence of the Forgotten Ones into the lives of the fortunate, by invoking the essence of the starving under the dual forms of Shiva/Kali. The ignorance, greed, selfishness and cupidity of the surfeited segments of humanity must be brought to balance with the despair, apathy, hunger and injustice which is the lot of the starving ones. That in Man which is withering has begun a gangrene infection of the segments that claim health and prosperity. Man must be healed, whole, and strong to meet the return of the Elder Gods...

...[The Magickian] interweaves the dreams of the starving with those of the fortunate, bringing the forces of Nightmare into play. The Race Unconscious must be aroused to full consciousness on a planetary scale, by whatever means will prove effective.

It is Nema's position that only by coming to grips with and healing the enormous suffering being visited upon the Third World can those in the developed nations wrest back the energies of the unconscious from their employ in the service of the devouring Elder Gods, and proceed to a higher conscious destiny as part of a united humanity. Should we fail, the Gates will be stormed—most likely in a nuclear conflagration—and the "Final Cataclysm" feared by the Baal-worshippers will have arrived.

One might go on, fleshing out the model presented in this article with further examples, but I think by now the point is clear. Jung's "demons," the Baal archetype, Bearden's tulpoids, and Nema's Elder gods all describe the same phenomena, though like the blind men with the Elephant, each description highlights different features. Jung also employed an additional, insightful metaphor in speaking of the return of an archetype from centuries of quiescence:

Archetypes are like riverbeds which dry up when the water deserts them, but which it can find again at any time. An archetype is like an old watercourse along which the water or life has flowed for centuries, digging a deep channel for itself. The longer it has flowed in this channel the more likely it is that sooner or later the water will return to its old bed. (CW v.10, p.189)

To return, in conclusion, to the question of U.S. foreign policy—and the resurgence of a profoundly conservative national stance—as an unconscious manifestation of Baal worship, we may derive no little confusion from the fact that overtly (i.e. publicly), the Pentagon and Executive branch of the government are in the throes of a Christian fervor unrivaled in modern times. How, one might ask, can our respected commanders—not to mention millions of our pious citizenry—be in the employ of the Elder Gods when nothing is farther from their minds? Therein lies the answer for, to repeat Jung's harsh observation, "every nation that falls into self-righteousness is their prey." Given the U.S.'s people's status as the most enthusiastic bunch of believers among all the developed nations of the north, and the pervasive influence of Biblical myth and symbols in forming the perceptions and values of the average american, it should be no surprise that what Jung called the Shadow—the repressed weaknesses and unacknowledged urges of the collective unconscious—might manifest in the shape of Baal.

Surface parallels between halley's runthrough of Baal-worship and the current availability of abortions or pornography provide further confusion by suggesting, at first glance, that proponents of women's rights or First Amendment freedoms are in the employ of Baal. This is not my intent. Some feminists support abortions and oppose pornography. Some activists working for peace in Central America oppose abortions. And some modern neo-pagans such as the aforementioned Nema worship decidedly non-Christian gods and goddesses in the course of efforts to end hunger and injustice. These are mixed phenomena that resist simple moralistic equations.

If these archetypes or gods are indeed "returning," examples may well be found on both Left and Right, in both moral and immoral guise. Baal may even be called Yahweh this time around—and vice versa. However, while traversing this terrain of loaded words, we'll do well to remember that no archetype—even that of the trickster (e.g. Satan)—is solely evil. What may prove evil, or at least tragic, is to ignore the manifestation of a powerful archetype until "too late" when it has seized a society in a frenzy. Then there's no reasoning with it and one finds oneself in the grip of Fate.

---

JAY KINNEY is a regular contributor to Critique. He is a freelance cartoonist, Editor of the newly published Gnosis Magazine, and a longtime student of conspiracies, secret societies, Gnosticism, and science fiction. For more information about his new magazine write c/o POB 14217, San Francisco, CA 94114.

THE METAPHYSICAL STRUGGLE

Quotations from The Seven Purposes
by Margaret Cameron

1. "All the forces of humanity are turned against freedom. The church imposes its creed, the class imposes its caste, the profession imposes its etiquette, the moralist imposes his fear, the libertine imposes his folly. All men are bound by the conventions of church, caste, profession, or moral status. Thus do they throw wide the door to forces of disintegration. Each man assumes a purpose not his own; a force that is his own deserts him." 109

2. "Few humans are pure purpose, and the first fight is in themselves." 97

3. "Men must learn to choose their purposes consciously and intelligently, to be definitely and actually building for a definite and actual future." 99

4. "The time has come when men must choose consciously to fight for or against the forces of construction. They are confused from the conflict within themselves, running hither and thither, calling for help from the gods they have made unto themselves, but only looking to the present good, perceiving only the present purpose, fearing only the present defeat." 102

5. "The forces of disintegration have made friends with the poor and the needy, and have fed them husks of brotherhood. They have made friends with the powerful and rich, and have tempted them with earth and its kingdoms." 102

6. "The forces of freedom are individual. Shun dependence. The forces of progress are fearless. Shun fearful combinations. Work together as individuals, consciously, co-operating, not as sheep. You will learn to think. You will learn to feel. You will learn to see." 103

7. "The forces of disintegration are wily, but fearful. Bullies and cowards. But when they are united in sufficiently strong numbers, fearless and unscrupulous. They fear the reawakening of the forces of progress in your life. This is the reason they gather now, to smite while the world is weary. Disguised as purposes of light, they hope for welcome." 103

8. "When men learn that the Force Beyond Perfection is purpose, which has personified itself in them, they will grow to feel the possibilities to which they have heretofore been insensible." 105

9. "Eternal purpose is perfect justice, perfect fearlessness, perfect understanding, perfect honest, perfect sympathy, perfect unity, and eternal growth, which is progress perfectly expressed. This is the end for which we work. Not Nirvana. Not oblivion. Not power stagnant and powerless. But a perfect balance, progressing to purposes and powers as yet undreamed." 105

10. "All men are fusions of many purposes, moved by many forces, answering to many calls. Each responds to the call of his dominant purpose, which flow and fluctuates with his life's struggle. One day he destroys, and cares not. One day he builds, and marvels at his power. One day he sleeps and forgets. One day he fights to the death for a purpose he had not yesterday, and loses tomorrow. This is the life of man, and this our field of battle." 107

11. "Purpose manifest itself in man inevitably in action. His purpose is not what he believes, not what he desires, but what he is and does. If he destroys, and builds not on the ruins, he is against us. If he falls and fails not, he is with us, though he stumbles a hundred times. He fights within himself the ancient fight, and if he wins that, his eternal battle is won." 107

12. "In every man captive to forces of disintegration the builder lies dormant. To reach that faint flow of Eternal Purpose is the first duty of every constructive force. Call to it, rouse it, free it, and it will eventually respond. But do not smother it with false charity, darken it by conflicting precepts, weaken it by fictitious aid. Every individual must serve his own purpose. Only thus is the integrity of the whole conserved." 107

13. "Free development demands free purpose and concentrated force. Wherever two or three are gathered together to follow the same purpose in free and conscious co-operation, there force is multiplied. Wherever a hundred are assembled to be led like sheep by the bellwether, there forces are debauched and disintegrated." 109

14. "Because free speech has been debauched to fell purpose, free men distrust it. Men, forces of disintegration, but possessed of glib tongues, have played bellwether to the multitude." 110

15. "Fear of disintegrating purposes makes for wisdom, and wisdom makes for construction. Fear is a disintegrating force made constructive, when directed against disintegration." 116

16. "Brotherhood, to one class, is a defensive organization, for protection. Brotherhood, to another class, is an offensive organization, for pillage. Brotherhood, to another class, is an organized attempt to preserve the unfit. Brotherhood, to another class, is a dream of unorganized following of untried theories. None of these know that all men are brothers." 116

17. "Church and state alike urge morality for personal ends, and recommend personal punishments. There is no morality. There is only purpose, constructive or destructive. There is no punishment. there is only consequence." 117

18. "Before the light of freedom dawned on the world, a puissant chaos of purposes and forces fought for control of the liberties of men. A short space of time brought liberty of body, after the perception of the people had been clarified by the gradual development of the ideal of liberty. They moved rapidly toward it, when they began to understand it, with halts and hesitations and blunders, but forcefully and inevitably till. They overthrew kings and barons, and took into their own hands the physical and material government of their kind. But their minds and forces are still enslaved and shackled by outworn tradition." 119

19. "No man is free who commands not himself. No man is free who forgets his brother. No man is free who fears to follow his own purpose with all his force. No man is free who fails to carry his share of the common load...No man is free who commands not himself in any emergency." 120

20. "Free men choose freely how they will array themselves, but slaves are driven by their masters, visible or invisible, to fight for purposes not their own. Only when they have learned to discipline and develop their bodies, may they choose freely the force with which they will be arrayed." 123

21. "...your personal struggle is only with the purposes admitted to consciousness. All forces are constantly trying to reach you, to enlist you for the great struggle. Once admitted to your consciousness, you have no choice but to answer, and the struggle between opposing forces is fought with your help. Many waver between the two, now lending aid to this one, now to that. A few choose instantly; some to progress, some to build, some to delay, some to destroy. This is what men call character." 184

22. "You people have such a fear of imagining things that you shut out a lot of what we try to tell you. We can't get through doubt, bitterness, resentment or selfish grief. Fear can be conquered, but doubt shuts the door in our faces." 230

The above is from a book which is out of print. We are contemplating whether to publish this remarkable book either in its entirety or just the section called the Twelve Lessons from which the invisible entities communicate their important messages to mankind. We are wondering what kind of interest there is out there. If you are interested, please drop us a line so we get a feeling whether it would be advantageous to publish this important 1918 work.

The Lord of the World

by William Grimstad

It's hard to think of an "occult" topic, other than Atlantis or "flying saucers" or the Bermuda Triangle, that has been the subject of more irresponsible writing and spurious research than has the vexed subject of Agartha.

For obscure but seemingly inborn psychological reasons, the idea of a sort of hidden pope coordinating all the secret activities of the world from an underground kingdom in the vastness of the Himalayas has a recurring glamor.

Starting with a 19th century traveler and romancer named Louis Jacolliot, the line of such superficial commentary slides to a reductio ad absurdum in the fantasies of "pop" mystic Robert Charroux: "There are four entrances to Agartha: one between the paws of the sphinx at Gizeh, another on the Mont-Saint Michel, a third..."

Even so deadly serious a purveyor of metaphysic wisdom as Helena Blavatsky waxes faintly ridiculous in her solemn revelations of supposed huddles with spooky "Eastern masters" such as Koot Hoomi of the "Great White Lodge." Ditto for her Theosophical Society followers, Annie Besant and Alice Bailey, together with an unknown legion of spinoffs among today's vendors of what has irreverently been called "kharma cola."

What is surprising, however, in view of this prolonged flood of fluff, is that there have been a number of sober and closely reasoned explorations of the curious lore, both ancient and modern, that has given rise to the Agartha mythos. By far the most important of these is "Le Roi du Monde," a 1927 study by the great French student of symbolism and ancient Aryan religions, Rene Guenon. It has, at last, been published in English in a fine volume of modest proportions but monumental import. [THE LORD OF THE WORLD by Rene Guenon; Coombe Springs Press, High Burton, Masham, North Yorks, HG4 4BS, England. 1983, 70 pps., softcover.]

Guenon is not what we today might call a "user friendly" writer. All of his books are as short on color and personalizing touches as they are marked by rigorous economy and reduction to essentials. Because of this "density," they demand a rather high involvement by the reader, and fortunately this new edition of The Lord of the World has been graced with a fluent translation that is far superior to the pedestrian rendering of his magnum opus, The Reign of Quantity.

An example of the care that has gone into this volume may be seen in the presentation of its title. Although the literal meaning of "Roi" is "king" it was felt that "lord" would better evoke the author's idea of a simultaneous spiritual and temporal authority.

For some reason, the Agartha theme has been highly stimulating to the Gallic imagination. Guenon's book takes as its starting point the two earlier works: Mission de l'Inde by a certain Saint Yves d'Alveydre, and the better known Beasts, Men and Gods, by a French academician and political writer of this century, Ferdinand Ossendowski.

Guenon always seemed able to draw upon vast - presumably initiatic - sources of profound information into the sundry arcane topics to which he turned his attentions. He appears to have set out here to amplify Saint Yves's brief early-day account, and to clarify Ossendowski's often rather superficial observations.

Both men were travelers recounting what they had been told about a mysterious center of power reputed to exist somewhere among the deserts and mountains of Central Asia. Saint Yves concluded that this place had inherited the authority of the universal lawgiver, Manu, a "cosmic intelligence that reflects pure spiritual light and formulates the law ("Dharma") appropriate to the conditions of our world and our cycle of existence," as Guenon puts it.

However, the Lord of the World as such is not "Manu," but rather a sort of prime minister who mediates "Dharma" into the affairs of mankind. His title, Guenon informs us, is Brahmatma, "sustainer of souls in the spirit of God." Or he also may be known as Chakravarti, which in Hindi signifies "He who makes the wheel turn."

As Ossendowski was told by a lama:

The Lord of the World is in touch with the thoughts of all those who direct the destiny of mankind... He knows their intentions and their ideas. If these are pleasing to God, the Lord of the World favors them with his invisible aid. But if they are displeasing to God, He puts a check on their activities.

As for Agartha, it is a locus usually referred to as underground, or something quite specifically located in a vast network of caves. This very likely is metaphorical, since the name Agartha itself means "inaccessible" or "inviolable."

However, Ossendowski accepts the literal truth of the subterranean tradition. He reports that "a Soyot from near the Lake of Nogan Kul showed me the smoking gate that serves as the entrance," but admits elsewhere that "no one knows where this place is. One says Afghanistan, others India."

Agartha then, strictly speaking, would represent more of a condition of this supreme center on earth than its actual location. Traditionally, the center withdrew from accessibility about six thousand years ago, with the onset of the degenerate era of the Kali-Yuga. With this topic, Guenon begins his extraordinary symbolological odyssey, taking up where the earlier writers leave off.

Guenon was profoundly steeped in the ancient Aryan literature of the Vendanta, one of whose chief tenants is that of the four ages of Yugas. These are: Krita-Yuga, Age of Bronze, and Kali-Yuga, the Age of Iron, or Dark Age.

The last terminal era of smoke, ruin and blood is under domination of the death goddess Kali, and it is marked by the final degradation and dissolution of humanity. The Hindu sages believe that the world is now approaching the very abyss of the Kali-Yuga. One of the major themes of Guenon's many books is to chart exactly how this process is coming to its dire fruition, chiefly through the spread of philosophical materialism and maniacal enshrinements of quantity over quality via modern science, technology and industry.

Only with the catastrophic end of this epoch, fast approaching in the view of Guenon, can the great cycle begin anew and Agartha and its Lord of the World reappear before mankind.

The Agartha story would remain an interesting footnote to Asian folklore were it not that the legend has so many unexpected points of contact with the chief arcana of the Western mystery tradition. It is these that Guenon, with his unique combination of immense erudition and gemlike conciseness, has brilliantly summarized within this surprisingly modest compass.

Most obvious, of course, would be the ageless theme of "inner earth" beings. This has exercised human imaginings from Orpheus in Hades through the medieval alchemists and Rosicrucians to modern enthusiasts of the "hollow earth" ideas of Richard Shaver and Raymond Bernard. The Lord of the World represents the obvious epitome, and quite possibly the real point of origin, for these.

Guenon's list of other major themes tied in one way or another to Agartha is long: the Spear of Longinus and the Holy Grail—the Arthurian legends—Monsalvat pilgrimage center—the "Great Beast 666"—the Knights Templar—Freemasonry—Tibetan lore—the mysterious land of Tula or Thule, which was so bizarrely commemorated in the enigmatic Thule Gesellschaft that gave rise to the National Socialist movement in Germany.

Indeed, the fateful swastika symbol itself, we are told, is intimately connected to the tradition as the virtual emblem of the Lord of the World:

...This center constitutes the fixed point known symbolically to all traditions as the "pole" or axis around which the world rotates. This combination is normally depicted as a wheel in Celtic, Chaldean, and Hindu traditions. Such is the true significance of the swastika, seen world-wide, from the Far East to the Far West, which is intrinsically the "sign of the Pole."

Even the Jewish tradition, ordinarily so harshly ethnocentric, contains some odd arcana which suggest a cognizance of other and evidently more authoritative powers. Guenon finds Manu and his deputy the Lord of the World reflected in the Shekinah and Metatron of Kabbalistic mysticism, the latter being similarly styled "Prince of the World," and the "celestial Pole."

However, it is the shadowy figure of Melchizedek that both connects the Judeo-Christian tradition with Agartha, and brings Guenon's work right up to the present in relation to one of today's most controversial phenomena of popular psychology.

Melchizedek, the supposed ancient king of what is now Jerusalem, appears a number of times in the Old and New Testaments. He is treated with odd ambiguity, even by the usually dogmatic Saint Paul, apparently because the famous passage in Genesis 14 describing Abraham paying him the tithe seems to place Melchizedek in a superior position to the revered Jewish tribal patriarch.

Guenon writes:

Melchizedek, or more precisely Melki-Tsedeq, is none other than the title used by Judeo-Christian tradition to denote the function of the "Lord of the World." We have hesitated before publishing this information which explains one of the most enigmatic passages of the Hebrew Bible, but, having decided to treat the issue of the Lord of the World, concluded it could hardly be passed over in silence...

Melki-Tsedeq is thus both king and priest. His name means "king of justice" and he is also king of Salem, that is of "Peace," so again we find "Justice" and "Peace" the fundamental attributes pertaining to the "Lord of the World."

In the 1940's, ethereal "foo fighters" reportedly dogged Allied aircraft over Germany. An obscure aviator called, Kenneth Arnold galvanized a curiously receptive world media corps, and coined an unfortunate phrase, with his story of strange aircraft "like flying saucers" in the skies near Seattle, Washington.

Since that time, the unidentified flying object phenomenon has seen-sawed in the public consciousness, with periodic waves of public sightings followed by stony denials from government and intense ridicule from a small cadre on the periphery of the scientific community. Most of these latter scoffers appear not to be true working scientists, but mainly journalists with strong ties to the aerospace industry and to government-controlled space programs.

The upshot of this often ferocious debunking process has been that only a few genuine scientific researchers have had the hardihood to delve into the extremely "messy" UFO business. One of the more perceptive of those who have is the French-born mathematician and computer researcher Jacques Vallee.

After a series of books examining the UFO phenomenon from a mechanistic perspective, Vallee's thinking, like that of virtually all serious UFO students, appears to have evolved in the direction of pondering less the troubled reality of the "saucers" and more the effect that their appearances—and allied cultism—seem to be having on the public.

In his last published study, called Messengers of Deception, Vallee makes telling observations on how damaging the long siege of UFO hijinks has been to the public's formerly unquestioning faith in rationalism and its self-chosen priesthood, the scientific community.

There is much independent evidence that something like this is happening, and on a far broader scale than Marilyn Ferguson has examined the spectrum of opinion-molding esoteric cultism in the Western World. Her work indicates a broad decline in popular regard for the basic positivist-rationalist credo.

The implications of this for the present "pluto-technocratic" world order are serious indeed. But more to our purposes is what Ferguson reveals (and does not reveal) about the comparatively small number of guiding personalities at the top of the far-flung "Aquarian" pyramid. We are left wondering—From whom do they get their marching orders?

For Vallee, however, this is a side issue. The greater part of his unusual book if taken up with a subject that is clearly of huge perplexity to the author, because he found it interwoven with UFO matters worldwide. Eventually, it even began involving itself in his own life.

It is both a cult phenomenon, expressed in a maze of grouplets of unstable people that come and go, and beyond this, a more elusive and seemingly international coordinating center of some kind. Its name, Vallee tells us, is the Order of Melchizedek.

His research reveals earlier Melchizedek traces in the now obsolete Roman Catholic Tridentine Mass, in the senior priesthood of the Mormon Church, and in rituals of certain elite sects of Freemasons. Vallee is let to speculate on the connections, if any.

Rene Guenon was mainly known in his day as a student of Oriental religions and of traditional philosophies. However, future readers will come to value still more his incredibly deep insights into the cosmic art of symbolism. In his Aperçu sur l'Initiation, Guenon has written:

The true basis of symbolism is, as we have said, the correspondence linking together all orders of reality, binding them one to the other, and consequently extending from the natural order as a whole to the supernatural order. By virtue of this correspondence, the whole of Nature is but a symbol.

Vallee shows an unconscious drift in this same direction that also is visible in the work of many other scientists now in this day of the "Tao of Physics" when a researcher like Murray Gell-Mann can win a Nobel Prize for applying concepts like "charm" to the increasingly bewildering vagaries of so-called subatomic particles.

Vallee's major field is computer information theory, and by the end of Messengers of Deception, he concludes that what the UFO phenomenon and its allied Melchizedekian sects really signify is, not visits by interplanetary astronauts, but a maddeningly subtle sort of "reality game" that is being played from somewhere unknown as a "control system" (his words) over the attitudes of large groups of diverse people.

The ultimate question, Vallee opines, comes down to the real nature of energy and information:

I have always been struck...by the fact that energy and information are one and the same thing under two different aspects. Our physics professors teach us this; yet they never draw the consequences...

If energy and information are related, why do we only have one physics, the physics of energy? Where is the physics of information? Is the old theory of Magic relevant here? Are the writings of Paracelsus with his concept of "signatures," an important source of information?

His implied answer: Yes.

To all of which, Guenon probably would have given one of those inimitable Gallic shrugs as if to say "What has taken you so long?," then parenthetically suggesting the more precise word symbolism for Vallee's information.

Practically everyone who has looked into the role of clandestine control groups behind the scenes of everyday political and social "reality" eventually has arrived at the question: Is there some central authority above the diverse Trilateralists, Zionists, Freemasons, KGB/CIAs, central banks, multinational cartels, and other furtive power blocs at work shaping our world?

Is there, to address the issue raised by this book, a living, breathing Lord of the World? Ferdinand Ossendowski had no doubt of it, recounting reports that the Brahmatma had visited Buddhist festivals in Siam and India in recent times, displaying the emblem of a golden apple surmounted by a lamb.

Unfortunately, Guenon does not categorically answer this key question himself. He appears to wish to leave us with the more implicit image of the Lord of the World as a sort of vast, panhistorical construct of diverse symbol textures.

But perhaps, as Jacques Vallee's trend of thought would suggest, there really might be some place in the world at which idea and energy interconvert. That may be as close as we in this troubled era, with our rigidly linear mental habits, can approach to the ramparts of long-hidden Agartha.

* The reader can learn of still earlier votaries of Melchizedek, stretching back to the dim mists of antiquity, in the various Jewish and Catholic encyclopedias, under this heading. Of course, Jesus himself was said by Paul to be the high priest "after the order of Melchizedek," in Hebrews 7.

---

WILLIAM GRIMSTAD has researched and written on a wide variety of topics including art history, revisionist political history, conspiriology, scientific anomalism, and Nordic paganism. He has had a longtime interest in Rene Guenon, and in other advocates of a holistic conception of man and the world.

BATTLEFIELD EARTH: The Covert Subversion of Humanity

by Alanon

*I know it is so of a truth: but how should man be just with God?
Which commandeth the sun, and it riseth not: and sealeth up the stars.
Which alone spreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves on the sea.
Which maketh Arcturus, Orion, and the Pleiades, and the chambers of the south...
Canst thou bind the sweet influences of the Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion?
Canst thou guide Arcturus with his sons?*

— JOB 9: 2, 7-9; 38: 31-32

"We've already been invaded!"

What's this? You ask. Invaded by who, or by what? The Russians? Aliens? "must be them thar alien folk comin in, blastin away in their Yoo-eef-oos, eh?" "Who'd believe such tripe, an who you tryin to kid, anyway?"

That would probably be the typical answer to an outrageous statement such as "THE ALIENS ARE HERE! THEY WALK AMONG US NOW, UNSEEN, LIKE CHAMELEANS!"

"Yea, yea, sure they are, buddy" you say walking away, mumbling about "fruitcakes" and "nutcases" and such.

Still, there are those voices in the wilderness who dare to believe the unbelievable, think the unthinkable.

One of these brave souls is Oscar Magocsi, a self-proclaimed "contactee" from Toronto, Canada. Oscar has faced potential ridicule and harassment by coming forward to tell his story, an incredible story...but, if you think on it hard enough, what he says may begin to make sense, and explain some here-to-for unexplainable mysteries. What Magocsi says will shock some, to others his words might open up some new and frightening possibilities, and to a very select few "in the know", his words may be taken matter-of-factly and with acceptance, while yet others may read his words with outrage and embarrassment, knowing that they and their plans have been laid bare.

For what Magocsi says is this: Those who fear a possible outright invasion by aggressive forces from outer space better think again. It would be foolhardy, with the rapidly increasing defense capabilities of the major Earth powers, for an alien race to attempt an outright invasion of our world when their goals could be achieved just as well, if not better, by COVERT SUBVERSION!

Why not? Russia and the United States' secret covert operation have been attempting to overthrow third world countries for years. Check out Central America!

Many people who hear the claims of those like Magocsi will probably discredit them as some kind of sensational attention-getting device, yet many of these people have admitted seeing UFO's, or flying objects which they cannot entirely explain...

The Milky Way...400 billion stars strong. How many civilizations could exist out there in the blackness of space, just in this galaxy alone? Not to mention the billions of counted and uncounted island universes outside our own. There seems to have been enough time for millions of races to grow, flourish, attain interstellar traveling capabilities, and fall to ruin.

This planet earth, a small insignificant speck of dust, circling a small, insignificant star out in the boondocks on the outer fringes of a galaxy. Kind of makes you feel small, doesn't it? Thank God there are those who keep telling us that in this endless universe, we earth humans are the only intelligent life. Doesn't it make you feel good to know that God created trillions and trillions of stars just for his chosen offspring on earth to gaze up at on a starry night?

Guess again! The fact is, the odds are a trillion to one against us being the only intelligent lifeforms in the Cosmos.

Think about it.

We are, in relation to the unimaginable span of time (if you want to limit yourself to measuring the universe with such an unstable or uncertain thing as "time") in which the Universe has been in existence, merely a seedling race, just beginning (although there are those who would argue that this world has been bred by races as advanced as us in the past, and they just may be right). When you think of it, that just within the past few hundred years mankind has gone from the horse-and-buggy to interplanetary space-flight, it makes you wonder how advanced some of the civilizations "out there" might be? Are those beyond our earth benevolent, or are they malevolent? Or both? Just as the Cosmos seems to be engaged in a never-ending battle between fire and ice, it is only reasonable to assume that the forces of Good and the forces of Evil keep this universe from being a boring place, free from stagnation. Does that mean evil is necessary to spur on and forge the Good, pushing them onward and upwards with constant trials and tests? If God is against evil, then why does he allow it to exist in his universe? God only knows, there's a reason for everything. One thing is for sure, Good is definitely better than Evil, and although it may not be possible to eradicate evil from the universe, it should be kept in check, just the same as an exterminator keeps the termites in check, though he knows they'll probably never be eradicated for good.

So, chances re, there are both Good/Positive and Bad/Negative forces out there, among the stars. And no doubt those of inferior self-control would look on this beautiful emerald planet, if they happened by it, in perhaps the same manner a sight-seer in a museum gazes on an ancient emerald necklace...with envy! With a desire for it's possession. Basic human nature. Wherever you go in the Universe you will find those who are never satisfied with what they have: The more they have, the more they want! This lesson has been repeated countless times on Earth, though for some strange reason, Earthlings in particular find it rather difficult to learn from their mistakes.

Well the, back to the UFO problem.

For those who might wonder, the most recent polls indicate that over 50 percent of those people questioned stated that they believed UFO's were extraterrestrial in origin. Yet, when these same people are told alien visitors, or "invaders" are walking among us now (and we worry about the Hispanics being "illegal aliens") they would most likely state emphatically to the contrary, that such an idea was ridiculous!

If earthmen or women were to travel to other worlds would they spend years just "observing" the planet from above after traveling such a great distance? NO! They would land (if possible), learn more about the world, and if they were anything like earthpeople in appearance (and ever earthpeople are widely diversified physically) they would try to attempt infiltration into their society in order to better get the feel of their civilization, and learn how we can best help (or hinder) them. If our hypothetical earthling astronauts were to find a world with a civilization anywhere near as aggressive in nature as themselves, they would definitely not attempt an open landing, but would instead take the infiltration route.

If alien craft have visited our world the odds are in favor that they would attempt the same thing instead of just sitting up topside twiddling their thumbs (or tentacles).

Why would they travel all that way just to be "observed" and photographed and argued about by earthlings? What of the so-called UFO research centers? Are they any where closer to the truth on answering the riddle of the UFO than they were 30 or 40 years ago? How much money and effort has been spent on deadend research, while all this time those with differing opinions are going at each others' throats like there's no tomorrow? (The "invaders" are probably slapping their knees in laughter at the state of the "UFO" movement). These large institutions appear to be doing more damage than good when it comes to solving the UFO mystery. Some independent researchers even complain that they are more like black holes...everything goes in but nothing comes out!

Recent declassified documents obtained through the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) prove that the United States government and Military institutions (and those of other countries) are very interested in the UFO phenomena years after they publicly claimed that their research on UFO's had ceased! Despite the best efforts of the powers-that-be to explain away each and every UFO sighting, every photograph or other bit of evidence, why is it that over 50% of the people believe that UFO's exist and are extraterrestrial in origin? The government hasn't been doing its job too well, or...the public senses the truth.

Believe it or not, there are those earth-persons who claim to have met, even spoken with beings from beyond our planet, even from beyond our dimension!

Oscar Magocsi is such a man. Magocsi claims to be one of seven "earth representatives", or "contactees" of a group of beings who have taken a profound interest in the affairs of our little world. One of these other seven, according to Magocsi, is a fellow by the name of "Buzz" Andrews. These beyond-earth beings are members of what is known as the "Psychean Worlds".

The Psycheans, Magocsi claims, are members of a much larger super-commonwealth known as the FEDERATION! The Federation is a conglomerate of several different minor federations, systems, and individual planets.

According to what Oscar and "Buzz" learned from their Psychean friends, "...Earth's mankind originated from the scattered systems in the Pleiades, and migrated to Earth many millenia ago. Since then, our 'left behind' human relatives spread out all over the galaxy and other dimensional realms, as well. Their loosely-knit 'commonwealth' of the thousands of star systems in the various dimensions, is called the INTER-DIMENSIONAL FEDERATION OF FREE WORLDS (FEDERATION, for short) and spans thirty-three vast sectors of the multidimensional Cosmos."

Ever wonder why there are so many different types of "humans" on earth with their hundreds of different and diversified languages, cultures, not to mention physical features such as skin tones, height, etc? This would also include the many diversified lifestyles, from the desert dwellers who can survive on a few drops of water a day, to the Eskimos who can withstand extreme cold. From the high-altitude tribes of the Andes and Himalayas who can survive in a reduced oxygen environment, to the dwellers in the infested jungles, naturally immune to many of its potential diseases. Yes, man does seem to be the most adaptable life form on the planet. Why, then, cannot he be the most adaptable life form in the Universe?

If our ancestors did, for the most part, originally come from other islands in the sea of space, then many of these mysteries would be explained. Why don't we "remember" this migration to earth, then? This world has seen many rises and falls both in nature and civilization, its reasonable to assume that most, if not all of this knowledge would not survive, at least in any form other than scattered myths and legends.

Magocsi's (and "Buzz" Andrews') experiences with the Psycheans appear in ODYSSEY IN UFO's, a three-volume set of books describing their unearthly encounters (SS&S Publications., 17 Shetland St., Willowdale, Ont., Canada M2M 1X5).

There is another alliance, they were told, which is Evil in nature, known as the IMPERIAL ALLIANCE OF RIGHTEOUS WORLDS (ALLIANCE, for short), who are trying to conquer the earth through subversion. This is being carried out here, by proxy, through the MIBs (Men In Black), the Illuminati and other subordinates.

"The other subordinates are all the unscrupulous politicians and secret organizations, who appear to be acting for their own greedy ends; but, in reality, they are being used, through manipulation, by an overseer organization called the ILLUMINATI.

"The Illuminati have always been aiming for maximum psychic pollution (through corruption and strife), and for chaos and mayhem, the necessary preconditions to establish a Socialist World Government, where everybody would be owned and controlled by a dictatorial World State - run by the billionaire money barons and international bankers for the Illuminati. The Opposition wants to utilize Earth's badly-perverted psychic emanations (through powerful amplification) to disrupt and eventually conquer other systems in the Cosmos, as well," Magocsi and Andrews claim.

II

Is there a small, elite group of powerful, behind-the-scenes rulers who have been manipulating the affairs of Earth towards their own ends for years, if not centuries, as Magocsi and Andrews claim?

Dr. Antony C. Sutton of the University of London, an honorary recipient of a prestigious Research Fellowship at Stanford University's Hoover Institute, believes that there is. In fact, he claims to have proof that this world has been deceived for years by only a handful of manipulators. Sutton, author of a series of works titled THE ORDER (Research Publications, P.O. Box 39850, Phoenix, AZ 85969), claims to have come across secret documents which reveal a terrifying, long-range conspiracy that seeks to control our lives from cradle to grave, a goal which, if brought about would turn this world into a totalitarian nightmare as frightening as anything George Orwell could have imagined.

This secret society, according to Sutton, already has control of education, the political parties, private banking firms, major law firms, and philanthropic foundations. It also has dominant influence in the Executive branch of government, foreign policy, media, and the Federal Reserve.

Sutton's books explain why, among other things, the West built the Soviets and Hitler; why we go to war, to lose; why Wall Street loves Marxists and Nazis; why the kids can't read; historical facts suppressed, why politicians lie and hundreds of other whys...

Some researchers believe that this secret society, known as "The Order", has connections with another secret organization called the Bavarian Illuminati, whose members call themselves "our Order". This seems to conform to the revelations which were given to Magocsi and Andrews from their unearthly sources.

According to Oscar Magocsi and "Buzz" Andrews, the major "operations center" for the Federation is in the Star System of Arcturus. Another star which is involved with the upliftment of mankind is Sirius, a star which constantly sends uplifting thought-wave transmissions to counteract the negative psychic bombardment of the Earth by The Enemy.

The home base, or central hub of operations for the Dark Forces and the Imperial Alliance and the Evil empire they rule in our cosmic sector is in Ursa Major, with Draconis being used for a principal operations center. The Dark Forces and their Earthling 'Illuminati' servants keep passing themselves off as the 'good guys'. They do this to confuse then exploit, planting their evil teachings in order to further subvert humanity. The Dark Forces, according to Magocsi and Andrews, would like us to believe that they are based in the Orion nebula; but, they merely came from there as the 'Fallen Ones', still hanging around those fringes. In actuality, Orion is the home of the 'Lords of the Light' and also for the 'Galactic Council'. The regional representatives of the Galactic Council (Solar Tribunal) in the SOL system is based on the planet Saturn.

In addition, the Psychean representatives were told that, "To subvert law and morals and to control behavior: media manipulation, political extremism, satanism, pornography, and even rock music is being widely used." They also add that Satan, himself, was an 'ancient astronaut' who was cast down, or fled to Earth after an ancient "war in heaven" between the Dark Forces and the Forces of Light, led by the archangel Michael and his legions of cosmic warriors (see: Revelation, 12:7).

Researcher Robert G. Girard refers to this conspiracy as the "conspiracy to keep us human". In his article, "The Ultimate Cover-up," which first appeared in PURSUIT Magazine (c/o SITU., Box 265., Little Silver, N.J. 07739), Vol. 16, No. 2., and later in CRITIQUE: The Journal of Conspiracies & Metaphysics, Girard gives a thought-provoking essay, or "expose", on a "force" outside the earth which is determined to keep us

"human" through their manipulation and interference into the affairs of men, for fear that we might find our way out of the quagmire of humanism and ascent "Jacob's Ladder" into a new, higher evolution of being.

Arthur C. Clarke, in his books (and movies) portrayed the birth of such a "Star Person", with the help of super-beings from another dimension. He was not too far off base, there are those positive forces out there who are all for the collective ascension of humanity into the next step in evolution. However, there are also other powerful, though maligned, forces who are against this, and they have been holding the earth and its inhabitants back from this goal for thousands of years.

III

Further evidence which seems to indicate that there is indeed something strange going on here, appeared in an article in the NATIONAL EXAMINER, for Oct. 30, 1984:

Anson Heath, the writer of the article, believes that extraterrestrial beings are being sent to earth to save humanity while real-life "star wars" rage in the heavens. Or rather, what is what he was recently told in an interview with two self-proclaimed ET's, George and Honoria Selwin, who claim that they are scouts from a group of planets in outer space known as The Confederation.

"Our task is to help humanity cope with the diabolical forces of evil who are now assaulting Earth," the Selwin's told the EXAMINER.

"We were beamed down to Earth from our own planet to alert humanity to the perils they face from the forces of evil who we have been fighting for thousands of years."

George Selwin and his wife, who look like any other married couple, live secretly with earth friends on a farm in a rural area of Indiana. And they made public their true identities at a convention of sci-fi and UFO buffs in Fort Lauderdale, Florida. There, they revealed that their planet is located in a far off galaxy yet to be discovered by astronomers on Earth.

"The Earth is now involved in a struggle between good and evil and we want to help earthlings to prepare for the horrors of the war we have fought for so long," Honoria Selwin said. The couple said that the star wars now being fought in their galaxy bear an eerie resemblance to those seen in the Star Wars motion pictures.

"But they are much more sophisticated. We can direct our weapon fire at the enemy with our minds alone, for example," Mr. Selwin said. In fact, this claim is not as far-fetched as some might think. It is no secret that the U.S. Air Force has for some time been conducting experiments on jet-guidance systems, with some success, in order to develop the technology which would allow fighter pilots to fly their craft and operate weaponry with nothing more than mental commands and thereby cut down considerable on reaction time during combat.

According to Selwin, he and his wife are only two of a vast number of aliens from the Confederation now on Earth. Chillingly, the Selwins warned that their evil enemies are also here among us, trying to spread confusion and disorder among humans.

"Like us, they can't be recognized as anything but earthlings. There is nothing out of the ordinary about their appearance. The only way they can be spotted is by observation of what they do.

"Being inherently evil by nature, they can't avoid committing unspeakable crimes. They are killers, rapists, murderers. Their ultimate aim is to provoke violence and warfare," said Selwin.

"We of the Confederation are trying to combat them here on earth, and to identify the evil ones so that humanity can deal with them."

According to the Selwin's, the Earth has been targeted by their enemies because of the rapid pace of technological development on this planet this century.

Sound fantastic? Probably, but then again, as they often say, "Truth is Stranger than Fiction!"

It's not at all fantastic to assume that there may be other civilizations beyond this planet who might have developed the technology to travel between planets and stars. Many, if not most, of the stars in this galaxy are similar to our own sun, and they could conceivably possess planetary bodies capable of harboring intelligent life, especially if it is true that there has been an ages-old migration of civilization throughout the galaxy, and that civilization on earth might be the ultimate result of such a migration of colonists who may have landed on this planet thousands, or even millions, of years ago.

Scientists are just now confirming the existence of planetary bodies around nearby stars, using the latest astronomical techniques, and are being led to believe that planetary systems are the rule rather than the exception. That most stellar bodies may possess systems of planets of their own.

Some scientists are now even beginning to question Einstein's claim that nothing can surpass the speed of light (Einstein was only human, remember). Scientists have even recorded sub-atomic particles which do, in fact, travel faster than light!

This, along with the fact that scientists are also admitting that a form of "hyperspace" or "subspace" could in fact exist, lends credence to this possibility. A star race which is familiar with the concepts of hyperspace could possibly utilize that concept in inter-stellar, or perhaps even inter-galactic space travel and travel from one point in the Universe to another instantly (since, theoretically, time is nonexistent in hyperspace). A stellar, or star-faring race with this capability could have access to the entire galaxy, or even other island universes.

enda28 There are those who would say that we would never achieve sufficient technology to utilize such a radical venture. There have always been those

"skeptics" who, if they had their way, would have kept man from building the airplane or lying to the moon. Their favorite word is "impossible". When you think of it, nearly every great scientific discovery was considered "impossible" by countless narrow-minded so-called "experts" just a few short years before those discoveries were made. It's time we face the facts, consider the lessons of the past...NOTHING is impossible!

Scientific textbooks have constantly been rearranged and updated down through history as new discoveries came into the world. What was "impossible" one year, has in many cases ended up as common knowledge and accepted fact the next. Why then does science in modern times feel that their present level of knowledge is the highest in the universe and infallible?

Surely then, is it not possible that in the billions of years in which the universe has been in existence (if in fact you can put an "age" on the universe) other civilizations beyond this mere speck of dust called Earth, floating in the endless ocean of space, may have attained interstellar travel? The odds are in favor that this universe is literally teeming with life!

When you consider all of the civilizations which could exist out there, and all of the time which they have had at their disposal since the universe began (that is, if the universe even has a "beginning" or "ending"), there is good reason to believe that some of these races began to branch out to other planets, formed small federations, spread out further still, encountered other planets or civilizations or federations, joined with them in a super-commonwealth, and no doubt encountered (and possibly had confrontations with) some of the less unsavory planetary civilizations or stellar empires. Suppose, then, that in one corner of the Universe there appeared two inter-stellar organizations. One Good, desiring to bring peace and prosperity to their corner of the Universe...and one Evil, whose only desire was to satisfy their insatiable appetite for wealth, power and control. Suppose, then, that both of these "forces" came across a beautiful little jewel of a planet and decided to bring this little planet into "their fold"...

Enter the planet Earth!

Basically, we have here the underlying cause of the present chaotic conditions and turmoil on earth. This planet is smack in the middle of an interstellar battle between Good and Evil, and most of us don't even know it!

Oscar Magocsi, the canadian "contactee", confirms the fact that the Earth is indeed the center ring in an interstellar battle between good and evil. However, being mostly 'covert' in nature this battle is difficult to observe outwardly, but the ultimate effects of this interstellar confrontation are all-to-easily seen.

Magocsi also states that both of the opposing forces have established vast underground strongholds beneath the surface of the Earth which are used as Earth operations bases by both the Federation and the Imperial Alliance (and probably a few "neutrals" who are here just to observe the confrontation, or here on scientific missions of inquiry). Some of these underground strongholds are thousands of years old, and are nothing less than thriving underground cities, completely self-sufficient due to the superior technology of the inhabitants. This is much safer for them than the alternative of establishing orbiting bases of operations, which could possibly be discovered by the earth forces. This could well explain the many UFO sightings involving spacecraft seen entering or leaving mountains (underground bases) or entering and leaving lakes or oceans (undersea bases). Some of these bases, according to researchers, are hidden beneath some of the Earth's major cities! According to Magocsi, although the Alliance has established these subterranean bases of operation in various parts of the world, one of their favorite hiding places is in the Antarctic.

Albert K. Bender, in his book, FLYING SAUCERS AND THE THREE MEN (Gray Barker Books., Jane Lew, WV), confirms this fact of bases beneath the Antarctic ice inhabited by aggressive extraterrestrials or extradimensionals.

Bender describes his encounter with the Men In Black (MIB) who warned him not to speak out about his knowledge of the alien base at the South Pole where he claimed he was taken by the aliens. Bender, however, felt that it was his duty to inform the public of these sinister aliens and their secret operations on Earth. He died for it. Bender was found dead shortly after his book was published, apparently for "suicide", however, the strange incident surrounding his death have lead many UFOlogists to suspect that foul play was involved.

There are other rumors, or reports of evil aliens whose bodies were allegedly discovered in the Antarctic by Russian explorers (though other versions say it was Siberia). These "hibernating" frozen aliens, the reports say, were serpentine, or of some type of "serpent-race." Apparently, these aliens were revived, or so say the reports, and all the Russian explorers were killed, and the serpent beings, capable of transforming themselves and their appearance, took on the identities of the Russian explorers and are now apparently infiltrating the world, the governments, etc. (From: THE SHAVER MYSTERY: SPECIAL REPORT #6, published by Harvey Larsen., P.O. Box 4080., Torrance CA 90501)

Whether you believe such reports as the above or not (and admittedly it does sound like something right out of the movie, THE THING) it still gives an indication of the types of bizarre stories making the rounds.

Others have apparently encountered these evil beings at the South Pole under equally frightening conditions. For instance, an article in the SUN (April 10, 1984), titled "Terrifying Close Encounter at the South Pole" gives an account of a group of explorers who claim to have come right smack upon an alien base during a survey trip. The article reads:

"The government has put the big freeze on information about UFO encounters at the South Pole, but information has leaked out about a recent experience that terrified a South American team.

"I have never been so frightened in my life," says Captain Jorge Contreras, one of the Chileans who ran foul of the outer space beings.

"Contreras was a member of a six-family colony planted at a Chilean Air Force base in Antarctica, the southernmost continent.

"Many explorers and military personnel have seen strange lights and alien aircraft at the South Pole, though much of what they see is hush up.

"It is even believed that the dead bodies of aliens have been dug out of the Antarctic ice by research teams.

"And into this forbidding and mysterious environment was sent six families, to see if they could adjust to life at the bottom of the Earth.

"Everything was going fine," Capt. Contreras says. "Until one time during the Antarctic summer when I led a small expedition to one of the hot valleys.

"When I say summer, don't think it's warm out. The temperature rarely get above freezing. But you have a 24-hour-a-day sunlight during the summer down there, and it's not so bad."

"The 'hot valleys' are inexplicably warm regions scattered here and there around the Antarctica. In the past, researchers thought they were all caused by volcanic springs, but some of the valleys still aren't explored. It was to one of these that the expedition went.

"When we came to the lip of the valley we had to leave our snowmobiles behind and go on foot. We had gotten about half way down the rim of the valley when we saw something very strange," Contreras says.

"A huge glowing object zoomed around a bend in the valley. It had no wings that we could see, and the only noise it made was a humming sound.

"We stood there stunned as it flew right over our heads, and then it hovered there, menacingly. We were very scared and so we ran like hell back to the sleds."

"Contreras said that at one point two aliens grabbed one of the women but her screams of terror apparently frightened them and they let her go.

"The glittering UFO, which Contreras estimated to be about 50 yards across, followed the terrified explorers on a breakneck, high speed journey back to the colony.

"When they arrived the men ran inside and the alien craft settled down about 150 yards from the base. Inside the building the men, women and children huddled in fear as a ghastly, piping musical sound began to fill the air.

"Our radios wouldn't work, there was no way we could call for help," says Capt. Orlando Mirada. "That horrible sound got louder and louder, and all these strange images began to fill our heads.

"I think it was contracting us, trying to warn us away from the valley."

"Mercifully, everyone passed out or fell asleep at some point. When they woke up, the UFO was gone.

"We never went back to that valley again," Captain Contreras says.

"I am sure there was something there the UFO didn't want us to see. We all had terrifying nightmares for months afterwards."

"The government of Chile clamped down on the colonists once they started to talk about their strange encounter, and a spokesman says their people must have been 'suffering' from delusions, brought on by cabin fever."

One advocator of the belief that we may have already been invaded "through subversion" is Jerome Eden, author of THE DESERT MAKERS (Box 34., Careywood, ID 83809).

Eden presents an entire outline of the most likely course an alien race might take to conquer another planet INTACT, this being, in essence, a COVERT takeover! According to Eden, the Success of a covert invasion would depend on "...our ability to so thoroughly 'prepare the new planetary soil' so that our 'seeds' of seduction will be suited to acceptance WITHOUT NOTICE. Our two most formidable weapons are time and technology. With these, our program of pre-conditioning propaganda cannot fail. Secondarily, but equally important, is our use of key people, totally subject to our control, who are able to directly or indirectly influence all decision-making related to our operations.

"Covert operations encompass all operations wherein the real purpose of our activities is concealed from the target planet and its inhabitants. It has long been a tried and tested principle of covert operations that the best method of concealment consists in our ability to OPERATE ENTIRELY IN THE OPEN.

"This seeming contradiction (to conceal by operating openly) has proven itself time and time again by utilizing the instrumentality of PRE-CONDITIONING PROPAGANDA...

"Thus, at the side of every major official in government, the military, the various planetary intelligence departments, the news media, social planning, education, and labor, we patiently develop the operators capable of influencing the decision-making processes at the highest levels.

"The best operator is one who is totally unconscious of the fact that he works for an alien invader. He therefore has nothing to hide and nothing to 'confess' in the event of discovery. We simply encourage those of the target planet who already hold the beliefs and opinions we wish to promulgate. Should a prominent astronomer or physicist write a book or article denouncing the possibility of life on "other" planets, we immediately set in motion the requisite promotional activity designed to get "his" message to the widest possible audience.

"At the same time, we foster all works that convey the opinion of interplanetary life IN TERMS OF POPULAR FICTION. Thus by subliminal infusion and confusion, the mass planetary mind cannot distinguish the real from the unreal, the fact from fantasy. Confusion to chaos to control..."

IV

Michael Heleus, in his article: THE SUBVERSION OF EARTH EVOLUTION, in the Nov. 1984 (No. 21) issue of SHAVERTRON Magazine (P.O. Box 1708., San Anselmo, CA 94960), describes his own encounters with the Opposition when he happened to stumble onto their secret plans. A portion of his revealing article reads as follows:

"This is a brief summary of my knowledge and experiences concerning the operations of ultradimensionals (and apparently extraterrestrials also) beings of insectoid, mentalist, and Central Sun disconnected nature who have for millenia (at least) been trying to subvert the normal spiritual evolutionary processes on and in earth.

"Most of humanity are content to live lives sufficiently circumscribed by social and religious taboos that they are never directly aware of any struggle over the direction their lives take individually, much less en masse. And there are good reasons for this—the mass mind offers a measure of protection against the direct impact of the basic issue of life. But the price of the ignorance is, in the end, very steep. In the individual case, it can cost the opportunity to complete personal evolution, and for humanity to involution or mechanical crystallization.

"The mass-mind itself is usually largely under the control of the sort of nether powers whose activities I have been compelled to recognize in the course of my developing knowledge of cosmic resonance as a method of personal and cultural betterment. The more one separates from the mass in the course of development, the more interest from ultraterrestrials is attracted, both helpful and hindering, as well as curious..."

"I have learned that some of my difficulties as a child were due to interferences of a gargoyle employed by the insectoids as an agent provocateur—apparently they wanted to interfere with the course of destiny they knew would result in my learning of their scheme to attempt to take over the planet, and in my discovery of one means whereby this could be averted, through proper use of cosmic resonance..."

From this point onward in his manuscript Michael continues to describe his hair-raising experiences with the extraterrestrial-dimensional conspirators, revealing the most intimate aspects of their scheme, and describing certain "close-calls" resulting from the discovery of their hidden plans, etc. At one point in his manuscript, he states:

"There are several sources that I can mention who have written on the struggle for humanity now going on between the natural evolution and the the synthetic involution. Diana Adkins' (now Diana Harmony with Bob Beck) INTRODUCTION CONFRONTATION goes into it in detail. In the course of his floatation tank experiments, John Lilly was contacted by 'silicon entities' who were interested in gradually taking over the planet via computer silicon chip related technologies—this may have been triggered when he sniffed silicon glue used to seal the tank. He later wrote of the 'solid state conspiracy'."

But perhaps the most noted expert ever to widely promote this idea, and his belief in such a conspiracy, is Jack Sarfatti, editor of SCIENCE, ART AND RELIGION (Box 26548, San Francisco, CA 94126). Sarfatti, a who's who in the new physics, former physics teacher of Werner Erhard, and director of the Esalen physics program in the mid-70s, believes that the Kremlin is using the human potential movement as an Aquarian fifth column to take over America in a deep cover "Trojan Horse" psychological warfare influence operation. As Robert Harper of PSI-SCENE reports: "Sarfatti has developed a conspiracy scenario of international trans-time psychic wars which connects the New Age Consciousness groups with the CIA, KGB, the Stanford Research Institute (SRI) and with historical roots in the Nazi SS, extraterrestrials and extradimensionals. He envisages ourselves in-the-future as counter-agents. The truth of this conspiracy is being kept from us by what he calls Disinformation Agents and Useful Idiots." [see page 299 in Critique #11/12 and page 207 in Issue #15/16]

The Nuclear Threat Comedy

by Ben G. Price

The fear of nuclear war robs the ordinary person of the ability to reason clearly on issues of vital interest to us as citizens. This fear subverts the will of the people, and it is imposed by a power elite that has, after centuries of searching for an ideal tool for mass manipulation, finally developed the ultimate psychological shackle.

The American government, the first "nuclear power" on the planet, terrorizes its own citizens, successfully hypnotizing them with a double-blind dilemma: an arms build-up that is alternately praised by arms "experts" as our only protection, and damned by "expert" critics as the greatest threat to humanity.

With its contradictory statements of peaceful intent and resolute nuclear "readiness" the American government has intentionally created a nation of schizophrenic citizens who are unable to determine what is real. Consequently, they have lost faith in their own judgment and surrendered their democratic decision-making power to these self proclaimed "experts." The conservative and liberal media, acting as unconscious dupes, have given backbone to the conspiracy to create a psychotic atmosphere. Their dualistic, predictable approach to interpreting the "facts" has been manipulated so as to create a citizenry of bovine herd animals.

The goal of this conspiracy of fear: a docile population of millions.

They means of attaining the goal: psychological warfare against a domestic population.

The tools of the conspiracy: a demonstration of power achieved over forty years ago at Japan's expense and the proclamation that a foreign adversary (the Soviet Union) is identical with everything evil and vile and is in possession of comparable nuclear strength and fewer scruples about using it (despite the fact that they never have).

The lobotomization of a native populace is not just an American phenomenon. The "nuclear threat" is a tool of global domination wielded by a global elite. It is not a military tool, but a tool for psychologically immobilizing massive numbers of people. The Soviet Union has been unable to subdue its millions and gain their fealty through faith in the

---

The fear of nuclear war robs the ordinary person of the ability to reason clearly on issues of vital interest to us as citizens. This fear subverts the will of the people, and it is imposed by a power elite that has, after centuries of searching for an ideal tool for mass manipulation, finally developed the ultimate psychological shackle.

---

Marxist-Leninist dialectic. It has resorted to the same strategy used against Americans by America and by other nation members of the "Nuclear Club" to maintain the docility and cooperation of their large populations.

If, as claimed, global schizophrenia has been intentionally provoked through a sophisticated mass manipulation of emotional responses to strategically invoked threats, what is the reason for this type of manipulation?

Clearly, many explanations for why leaders may want unquestioning compliance from their followers can be imagined. If we picture leaders as market experts and high pressure salesmen who set out to "create the need" and then "close the deal" before the consumer can muster his resistance or has time to ask hard questions about the product, we begin to see the truth. If we ask what it is our leaders are selling, our own integrity may give us a grasp on why manipulation of vast populations would be desirable to the fear mongers.

Yet, it remains to be asked why this particular type of manipulation, the so-called "nuclear threat", has been used. In the past, nations and whole civilizations have been cohesively ruled without "benefit" of the threat of nuclear armageddon.

The first factor which made nuclear arms a handy means of mass behavioral control was the weakening of traditional, verbally constructed social controls. (The "nuclear threat," incidentally, is exactly this: a verbally constructed social control.) Traditional constructs for social control include those used by theocracies, such as the threat of eternal damnation for disobedient "souls." This kind of construct, like the modern "nuclear" construct, had to be constantly vivified in the public mind and kept alive by an elect priesthood who busied themselves "spreading the good news." Today, the media plays that role.

Virtually all of the member nations of the "Nuclear Club" fit into the category of industrialized nations in which an earlier, agrarian culture has effectively been supplanted by a culture of technology. In the old agrarian cultures, citizens were predisposed to political controls modeled on authoritarian hierarchies. These political and theocratic hierarchies mirrored the matriarchal and patriarchal structures of the basic social unit, the extended family. With the advent of industrialization, a new socio-economic order was ushered in which shattered that basic social unit, and thus the model on which the power structure was based and from which it gained its popularly supported validity. Ironically, the last remnant of the traditional social unit has been labled in recent times "the nuclear family."

The extended family structure was the model for hierarchical social control, but it has faded into the past. Thus, the behavioral conditioning of whole populations toward authoritative control has become feeble. The once omnipresent reinforcement of that conditioning has disappeared with the dispersion of families into an industrialized, nomadic population. For a brief span of time, people began to rest more authority in themselves and discovered, to their delight, that they had wills of their own.

As stop-gap substitutes for the lost "faith" (read: "conditioning") of the past, social leaders devised new "faiths" based on economic dialectics and even paternalistic nationalism that beckoned back to a mythic past. But these new attempts at mass conditioning, called "ideologies," were doomed to fail because their emotional impact was felt only by portions of the population and necessitated the victimization of the rest. Significant opposition to these ideologies was not only possible; it was a natural outcome because they were psychologically hollow and ultimately unconvincing.

What was needed by the power elite was a new form of conditioning, a verbal construct, a "faith" universal in its emotional impact. It would have to mesmerize the human spirit and make all opposition to the intentions of the elite cognocenti seem moot and hopeless. This new idea with universal emotional impact would have to make the system seem inviolable and the elite indispensable. Everyone's survival had to be at stake.

With the disappearance of traditional social conditioning, the groundwork had been laid for the re-conditioning of large populations. The next major factor contributing to the rise of the "nuclear threat" as the best hope for world subjugation was the fortuitous discoveries of quantum physics and the rapid development of nuclear capability.

The pursuit of revolutionary theories by intrepid minds was not strongly supported by the power structure. To them, the theories were incomprehensible and in direct conflict with existing, albeit outmoded, world paradigms. But once the old paradigms of hierarchical order in nature were incontrovertibly overthrown by new insights into the workings of nature, and once it was demonstrated that this new understanding would unleash unimagined power, the attention of powerful men was finally riveted on this pocket of arcane knowledge, and its secrets were co-opted by them for their own purpose.

Their purpose, it turns out, has been antithetical to the best interests and aspirations of the rest of us. And yet we lend them credence and support by subscribing to the fear they have instilled in us and continue to cultivate with every "summit meeting," every nuclear test, and every mention of nuclear weapons by the spoon-fed media.

The approach-avoidance ballet of the nuclear "adversaries" on either side of the globe, as their leaders alternately "give-in" to popular pressure to bargain with each other for restraint and then abandon negotiations because the other side was not serious about "substantive" talks, would reveal to an alert population that these leaders do not take the "nuclear threat" seriously. While they play act before cameras and microphones in Geneva, Moscow, and Washington, our fears are nourished by news of the arms build-up, but also by the overt demonstration of firm belief in the touted "nuclear threat" by activists and protesters. They are the system's dupes.

What can we do to short-circuit this insidious matrix of enervating delusions? If we can be neither for nor against nuclear arms without adding fuel to the grinding engine that spits out our mangled ability to reason, what can we do to regain our sanity?

My best answer, and one I think would work if adopted by popular consensus across national boundaries, would be a public suspension of belief in the "nuclear threat," expressed by sustained belly laughs every time it is mentioned.

The cadre of social necromancers in the power elite, with their nuclear spell that holds millions in catatonic complicity, can be broken by ridicule. And when they threaten to wipe the smiles from our faces by unleashing the fires of hell on earth, we can laugh all the harder, not because we are mad, as they want us to be, but because we are fearless, as they don't suppose we can be.

---

The cadre of social necromancers in the power elite, with their nuclear spell that holds millions in catatonic complicity, can be broken by ridicule. And when they threaten to wipe the smiles from our faces by unleashing the fires of hell on earth, we can laugh all the harder, not because we are mad, as they want us to be, but because we are fearless, as they don't suppose we can be.

---

'I'm Alive'

by Gary Butler

This is not the story of Karl "the Smarl" Krocatilo, although he will appear and reappear frequently and mercilessly. It is the story of the aftermath of one of the most bizarre industrial "accidents" in recent history.

The grotesque series of events herein described began with an otherwise average Monday morning at the DeNunzio Meat Packing Plant in Bayonne, New Jersey. At precisely 11:33 A.M. on March 12, 1981, Karl Krocatilo ripped off his faded green tee shirt and greased himself down with liquified pork fat. Karl may have been making a statement. If so, the statement could have been something like "Karl The Smarl is mad as a hatter, aaaaaarrggghh!!!" Anyway, Karl completed his statement by hopping and spinning about, wildly flailing his greasy arms, and hurling handfuls of vienna sausages and pork by-products into an astonished group of co-workers assembled nearby. Although no one was killed, thirteen sustained second degree pork burns and seven succumbed to Spam inhalation and had to be treated immediately in the plant infirmary.

Three weeks later, few people talked about Karl's aberrant behavior, and those who did were—shall we say, reluctant?—to discuss a nightmare common only to those unfortunate enough to witness the peculiar freak show. In fact, had it not been for the neurotic consistency of old Leon Borovis and his relentless determination to preserve for posterity his profound, if unsettling, visions (past, present, and future), the mystery might well have ended there. But Leon kept a diary. So when poor Leon croaked, the diary alone remained as a possible clue to the mystery of not only his death, but of the tragic circumstances surrounding the fate of nineteen of his fellow pork handlers. It is a pathetic testimonial to Leon's sad life, however, that no one even missed him for nearly two weeks. It was actually a construction worker in Hoboken, New Jersey who first acknowledged Leon's untimely demise, when he alertly noticed that three of the vienna sausages in his lunch tin had fingernails. Yes, Leon had gotten himself caught in one of the big, loud, powerful crusher/grinders used in meat packing plants. So it was in fact an FDA official who precipitated the search for poor Leon. Perhaps it would be more fitting to refer to the DeNunzio brothers, Guido and Paulo, as "poor," because this whole nasty incident really left a more lingering, if not more traumatic, taste in their mouths than it did in Leon's. But however difficult (and expensive) their ordeal with the FDA and the New Jersey State Attorney's Office, with all the litigation, restraining orders, and legal fees, it was paled into insignificance by the hideous, unspeakable horror shared only in the dreams of twenty pitiful pork packers.

Before the reader seeks to scoff or minimize the intensity of this most vile and heinous of visions, note that it is easy to do so from the comfort and safety of a breakfast table, peering over the morning paper and sipping orange juice (or coffee). But imagine staring into Charlie Manson's eyes while Bruce Lee pummels you with flying bits of pork, and you too might find yourself on the very next bus to Bananaville!

There is a tragic irony in the notion that the diary of Leon Borovis, a vulgar and utterly despicable only slime-bucket, contain the only vaguely coherent picture of the nightmare which was to ultimately destroy twenty innocent people. Of the original twenty, nine are known to have taken their own lives. Four others died amid what authorities will only concede were "mysterious circumstances." Six more have simply vanished, disappeared from the face of the earth—as if they never existed. The only remaining witness to the unholy conflagration of that greasy Monday morning is a fifty-one year old fork-lift operator named Hollis T. Moody. Moody is now a permanent resident of the Frances S. Detweiler Hospital for the Criminally Insane in Passaic. Hollis had taken a pipe wrench from his tool box and thoroughly flattened his wife's most delicate and cherished Easter Sunday hat, which of course would not have been grounds for commitment to Detweiler had she not been wearing it at the time. No one at the hospital has a clue to what Hollis Moody thinks about, but everyone is certain that his orbit is an uncharted one.

So, Leon's diary—what did it say? After the curious, inexplicable deaths, disappearances, and attempts to communicate with Hollis Moody, the discovery of the diary sparked a storm of controversy, and of course the media fanned the flames of sensationalism high into the night. Before long, the smell of burnt pork made nostrils flare from coast to coast. No truly objective source had a chance to fully appraise it's contents, however, before the dubious document was sucked into the protective custody of an investigative commission summoned by none other than the United States Attorney General. The diary now rests some 1,200 feet underground, deep in the lead-reinforced, titanium vaults of the the U.S. Archives in Washington, D.C. The finding of the Stevens Commission, which came to be nicknamed the Pandora Commission, was that the American public was not yet ready for the blinding revelations which were the legacy of Leon Borovis. The diary would be locked away for a period of not less than 100 years, and even then another commission was to be assembled to reevaluate the social climate and the ability of that generation to deal with not only the unspeakable, but the unthinkable contents of the diary of Leon Borovis.

And Karl "The Snarl" Krocatilo? Karl not only recovered completed from his brief sojourn into the surreal world of giant, twirling teacups, but enjoys a comfortable life of leisure in the Virgin Islands, funded by royalties from several books spawned by his peculiar notoriety. It seems that the gruesome, self destructive nightmares caused by his inexplicable pork dance affected only those who witnessed the phenomenon. When questioned about it recently in a rare interview, Karl was quoted as saying, "What can I say, I'm alive!"

The Second Vatican Council: Spiritual Reform or Blueprint for Subversion?

by Joseph P. November

The ongoing struggle between European Freemasonry and the Catholic Church is a history of the type of intrigue that goes on behind closed doors. The struggle formally began during the Reformation. Ironically, the Freemasons started out as Catholics. They were the guild members that built many of the great cathedrals of the Middle Age Church.

When the Vatican realized that it could not treat Martin Luther as just another heretic, the Jesuit Order (founded by Ignatius Loyola in 1534) was commissioned to act as an undercover anti-reformation agency. The Jesuits carried out such acts as assassinations, arrests of "heretics", briber, blackmail, and other sundry activities we today ascribe to the KGB or CIA.

The anti-clerical sentiment of the post-Reformation period prevailed throughout Europe's educated classes well into the 18th century. The liberals of the time were given great satisfaction by the success of the American Revolution (an event, by the way, which was organized by American Freemasonry — American Masonry, at that time, had not yet been infiltrated by the Illuminati). In Europe, however, 1776 had a much less democratic significance. On May 1st (May Day of the communist world) of that year, Adam Weishaupt created the Illuminati, a secret society whose initial purpose was to infiltrate and secretly guide Freemasonry in a revolutionary direction. The fact was that Freemasonry was an international organization whose membership included the most powerful figures in all countries of Europe. To infiltrate and secretly control such an organization would have international implications.

As a doubly ironic twist, Weishaupt was educated as a Jesuit and learned many of his subversive techniques from them, so that it eventually came about that the Freemasons and the Jesuits, both Catholic creations, became the spawning ground of the Church's most powerful enemy, Illuminated Freemasonry.

In Weishaupt's day, the typical Mason was a well-healed, cultured, educated man. Due to the prevailing liberalism in these circles, most Masons tended to be open-minded advocates of some form of democracy. Weishaupt was able to take advantage of this idealism by exploiting liberal ideology and using it for the political and financial benefit of his supporters.

His supporters at that time were the pre-Zionist Jewish banking families headed by the Rothschilds. The international banking power of that day was exclusively "Jewish" because Christians, historically, had been forbidden to borrow or lend money at interest.

Weishaupt and the Rothschild syndicate saw that they could kill two birds with one stone by pretending to be pro-democratic allies of the Freemasons. They could thus finance the overthrow of the twin evils of monarchy and popery and subsequently be in control (through their enormous wealth) of any democracies which might emerge after the revolutionary smoke cleared. Their scheme succeeded in France with the French Revolution of 1789. The Reign of Terror which followed was not what idealistic (and sometimes ambitious) Freemasons had in mind. Clearly, something was wrong.

It was at this point that the Jesuit Order became aware of Freemasonry's involvement in creating the anarchy in France, and a full scale war of intrigue developed between the Jesuits and the Freemasons. It is unclear at what point in history the Jesuits began to suspect the Illuminati connection behind the revolutionary behavior of European Masonry, but such works as Abbe Barruel's Memoirs Illustrating the History of Jacobinism and John Robison's Proofs of a Conspiracy aimed at exposing the driving force behind continental Masonry.

Open hostility now reigned between Freemasonry and the society of Jesus (Jesuit Order).

In the light of this brief outline of the origins of the struggle between Masonry and the Vatican, one is more able to appreciate the benefit which accrued to Freemasonry and the international bankers as a result of the Second Vatican Council called by John XXIII.

According to Piers Compton in The Broken Cross: The Hidden Hand In the Vatican, John XXIII was the man which Freemasonry finally succeeded, after more than 150 years of trying, in placing in the papacy. Compton recounts the story of John XXIII's initiation into the order while serving as Apostolic Visitor, Bishop Angelo Roncalli of Istanbul, Turkey. Compton describes Roncalli's initiation in great detail and lists Roncalli's associations with known leftists and communists up until he was eventually crowned as Pope John XXIII, Nov. 4, 1958.

It is well known that there are two main tactics employed in subverting a major institution: infiltration and blackmail. Whether Roncalli was an agent or a victim of blackmail I cannot say; but the evidence suggests that he served the secret society well. When John called Vatican II, there were two closely related vultures waiting to pounce on the corpse of the old Catholic Church: continental Masonry and international communism.

Could John XXIII have acted out of a sincere conviction that calling a council would help the Church? The fact of the matter is that the Church was not in need of any help, thank you! In the 1950's, the reign of Pius XII found Catholicism in its ascendancy. The Church empire was never greater, whether in terms of wealth or membership. People were converting to Catholicism in great numbers and young Catholics were filling the seminaries and convents. The Church was large and growing larger.

The Church's firm stand against communism was one of the reasons why people stayed with or converted to Catholicism. Other major denominations were wishy-washy by comparison. Nevertheless, John "had a vision" one day and called the Council. Why he would quarrel with this unequivocal success probably has something to do with Freemasonry. John convened the Second Vatican Council but did not live to see it concluded. Nor did he live to see the exodus of the faithful from the Church.

According to the Compton, Roncalli's successor, Giovanni Montini was most certainly an agent. Compton's rendering of Montini's associates of his pre-Papal days reads like a who's who of the communistic, internationalistic, Masonic set. These included such leftists as Jacques Maritain and Saul David Alinsky, both of whom were major anti-capitalist propagandists. Among Montini's super-capitalist associates were the Rockefeller Foundation and the Chicago millionaire, Marshall Field (who also happened to be in the business of publishing a communist newspaper.) Montini's own words serve to show his persuasion: "Don not be concerned with church bells. What is necessary is that priests are able to hear the factory sirens, to understand the temples of technology where the modern world lives and thrives."

The fact that Paul VI enthusiastically encouraged the "reforms" of Vatican II including the elimination of the Latin Mass, the new "dialogue" with communism, the declaring of things formerly sacred now mundane, a social gospel instead of detachment from worldly pursuits — to name a few — suggests that Paul VI was cast out of the same mold as John XXIII. Under John and Paul, the practice of excommunicating Masons from the Church was discontinued. Masons were no longer anathema. They now could come out of the closet. They would find no opposition coming from Peter's chair.

While Paul VI was perceived as a radical leftist by traditional Catholics, his hands-off policy toward the questionable activities of the Vatican Bank would make him seem like a greedy capitalist. But, of course, leftist or rightist, everybody needs money; and the pretext of a worthy cause is used by all sides as the justification for what is usually greed and power lust.

Before proceeding with the exploits of the Vatican Bank, the connection between Freemasonry and communism must be analyzed. The best way to perceive this connections is in terms of the international anti-capitalist conspiracy. Remember that Adam Weishaupt was using Masonry to bring about the atheistic, communistic French Revolution. this radical left activity of continental Masonry has since been part of their regular repertoire. But the Illuminati was financed by bankers! What gives? Aren't bankers capitalists? Why would capitalists fund their own destruction?

The answers: No, they are not capitalists. They are monopolists, anti-capitalists of the worst kind. And, no, they are not funding their own destruction. They are merely ensuring that no competition can arise to endanger their wealth and power. This is why they hired the phony, Karl Marx, to condense communist doctrine under the title of "The Communist Manifesto". Virtually all conspiriologists agree that world finance and world communism are guided by the same hand. They are, as it were, the two blades of the scissors that is trying to cut capitalism in two.

Freemasonry serves this conspiracy by providing the meeting ground for representatives for both groups. In the secret meeting halls of international Masonry, a wealthy banker can arrange to have his competition's bank blown up by either the Red Brigade or by a fascist group, depending upon where it is advantageous to lay the blame.

Until Vatican II, Catholicism was almost synonymous with anti-communism. Spiritual freedom and economic self-determination can hardly be separated. But once the anti-capitalist conspiracy gained control of the Vatican, economic liberty for the masses was no longer a matter of concern. Sharing the wealth became the theme of papal addresses. "Human rights" lip service has since been in vogue while, at the same time, very little has been specifically said about human rights violations behind the iron curtain, at least until John Paul II when the issue could no longer be ignored.

Although ideological communists want to see the Church destroyed, the internationalists know it is much wiser to control it. They thereby gain control of the hearts and minds of the millions of Catholics who are still faithful. Nevertheless, there are certain matters of dogma which must be changed if the conspiracy is to use the Church for its own purposes. Vatican II created these necessary changes.

The problem for the subversives was that it had to dilute the mysticism of Catholicism (the sacrifice of the Mass, belief in saints, the divinity of Christ, the existence of heaven and hell, etc.) and substitute for it a lukewarm "let's all be nice to each other without bothering about the Ten Commandments" social gospel. In this process, they had to be very careful because they couldn't afford to turn Catholics off totally or the faithful would abandon ship and the syndicate will have lost everything it gained in terms of power over millions of Catholics. (There is no empire without subjects.) Consequently, Vatican II was a mixed bag of humanistic and humanitarian amenities, anti-mystical censorship, and paternalistic smiles. The intention is to make Catholicism a religion without spiritual discipline, to make of it a humanism in which God and Jesus Christ are playing only symbolic roles.

An exception to this anti-disciplinary approach is in the area of abortion and birth-control. In my opinion, the conspirators decided that going along with abortion and the pill might just anger so many Catholic that the churches — and the collection baskets — might be utterly empty next Sunday morning, so they decided to play it safe. As it was, it is fair to say that, as a result of Vatican II, millions of people left the Church, myself included.

Paul VI was, as it were, the chief executive responsible for this transition from Catholicism to humanism. While this spiritual, political, and tactical game was being played with the average Catholic's mind, there was another game going on at the Vatican. It was an economic game of vast proportions.

David A. Yallop, in his book, In God's Name, tells the story of the assassination of John Paul I, successor of Paul VI. In order to explain who wanted John Paul I dead and why, he had to tell the story of the Vatican Bank and its relationship to Propaganda Two, the Italian Freemasonic lodge.

It was in 1830 that the Catholic Church changed its definition of usury. Before 1830, it meant lending money at interest — very simple and concise. After 1830, it meant lending money at excessive rates of interest — very vague and arbitrary. This change in the definition made it possible for the Vatican to go into the banking business and still have its conscience clear of the sin of usury. By the 1960's (during Paul VI's reign), Vatican Incorporated controlled numerous Italian industries including utility companies (which manufactured armaments), and sundry other investments including numerous banks.

It is not to Montini's credit that he spoke against birth control on the one hand and manufactured the Pill on the other. But a close examination of Vatican Incorporated during the reign of Paul VI shows only one thing: Scandal. One of the scandals involved the Vatican's unwillingness to pay taxes to the Italian government even though it was earning money like any other secular business, so, it resorted to bribing government officials to rant it tax-exempt status.

Vatican Incorporated got involved in speculations on the money markets; and these deals involved massive thefts of depositors' money, illegal transfers of Italian currency out of the country, blackmail and even murder. Paul VI knew these things were going on but did nothing about them.

In Yallop's book, several names feature prominently with respect to the Vatican Bank: Paul Marcinkus, Michele Sindona, Lucio Gelli, Roberto Calvi, and Cardinal Jean Villot of the Curia. Several organizations worthy of note at his time are Continental Illinois Bank, Chase Manhattan, the CIA, the Sicilian, New York, and Chicago mafia, and Propaganda Two, or P2, the Masonic lodge which apparently controls the fate of Italy.

The story goes like this:

During the 1960's, Vatican Inc.'s wealth increased tremendously, due mainly to the operations of Michele Sindona, Roberto Calvi, and Lucio Gelli. All three were P2 members with Gelli, a former double agent with friends in both communist and fascist circles, being the main recruiter for members. Together these three men spun a web of intrigue involving billions of dollars in shady deals, bribery, blackmail, and government corruption. Anti-Vatican sentiment in Italy was growing, i.e. Italian citizens were becoming aware that their inefficient and expensive utility company was owned by the Vatican.

On top of this, the Vatican paid no taxes on its operations. Once, when the Italian government demanded that it receive its fair share ("Render unto Caesar..."), the Vatican threatened to dump huge share holdings of Italian businesses on the market. This would have created a certain panic and might possibly have led to the collapse of the Italian economy. The government capitulated.

But in 1969, when an anti-Vatican socialist government was elected, Paul VI took the advice of Cardinal Villot and other counselors and decided to disinvest in Italy. The Vatican would sell off its shares in Italian operations (what it threatened to do to a previous administration) and reinvest in foreign ventures. This would serve two purposes: first, it would resolve the tax situation with the new government and, second, it would reduce the negative effect of the Vatican's secular presence in the Italian community.

The man chosen to accomplish the sellout was Michele Sindona. With Paul Marcinkus as the head of the Vatican Bank and Roberto Calvi helping on the outside, Sindona began the sellout. The sellout created havoc in Italy with unemployment and the cost of living rising simultaneously. Countless illegal deals were struck. And if it should occur that someone didn't want to cooperate, Gelli, the former espionage agent and P2 recruiter, could be counted on to blackmail people to get their consent or Sindona could threaten them with his mafia connections.

In September, 1978, the "unknown Pope," Albino Luciano, or John Paul I, shocked the world by becoming the new Pope. As Yallop's tells it, Luciano shocked himself by accepting the job. Unfortunately for Albino Luciano, he was an honest man.

In his brief period of leadership (33 days), John Paul I declared that the Vatican Bank was to be investigated. Sindona and Marcinkus and Villot were to be removed.

The jig was up. Like Christ overturning the moneychangers' tables in the temple, John Paul I had made a fatal decision. Too many important people had a stake in what was going on; and they had the power to deny the world an autopsy. Sounds familiar, doesn't it?

And what of John Paul II, the fourth Vatican II Pope? Is he an honest man? Considering what happened to John Paul I, at best, he could be considered a prisoner on the throne doing his best to hold together an empire that is breaking up. At worst, he can be considered the perfect man for the job, the one who keeps the faithful coming back to the churches while the secularization of Catholicism proceeds very steadily, gradually, unnoticeably, even making conservative concessions now and then for tactical purposes...so that the prize won't slip away.

The fact is that John Paul II has not repudiated Vatican II and the chaos it has brought down upon the Church. Whether he is a prisoner or an agent, the international syndicate remains in firm control while traditional Catholics wait for deliverance from what they see as a satanic conspiracy.

It may sound incredible for a born-and-raised Catholic to say this, but now may be the time for another Martin Luther.

Bibliography

The Broken Cross by Piers Compton, Neville Spearman Limited, The Priory Gate, Friars Street, Sudbury, Suffolk, England, 1983.

Conspiracy Against God and Man by Rev. Clarence Kelly, Western Islands, Belmont MA 02178, 1974.

The Final Conclave by Malachi Martin, Pocket Books, Gulf & Western Corporation, 1230 Avenue of the Americas, N.Y., N.Y. 10029, 1978. [He has recently authored the book called Rich Church Poor Church, about the non-distribution of wealth among the Vatican finances.]

Freemasonry and the Vatican by Vicomte Leon De Poncins (no publisher acknowledged), 1968.

In God's Name by David A. Yallop, Bantam Books, 1984.

Judaism and the Vatican by Vicomte Leo De Poncins, 1967.

Exploring the Eleventh Dimension

by Thomas Lyttle

Imagine a place or an object that is so small that it makes all of our usual definitions of small obsolete, crying out for a new term to be born as accommodation. The multidimensional universe described briefly by Paul Davies in the January '84 issue of Science Digest refers to just such a tremendously small place.<sup>1</sup> In fact, the only way that we can describe such extraordinarily small size is by mathematical notation.

With this method Davies tells us that this dimension is actually  $10^{-18}$  times smaller than the diameter of an atomic nucleus! For those of you unfamiliar with the language of higher math, this means that so many zeros are printed after the decimal that writing them out long hand would give your finger cramps and leave you with a case of cross-eyed eyestrain. Let's just say that this is so small that it is impossible to observe by any method known to science.

The problem is how such a geometry could exist within the framework of three dimensions we are accustomed to seeing in everyday life. Theoretical physicists who make it their business to think on such matters have proposed that the extradimensions are rolled up so incredibly small that they are undetectable. Imagine a two dimensional surface rolled up to form a cylinder, sphere, or torus. Now shrink it down so small that billions of them could be fitted inside the smallest known subatomic particle.

(The purpose of why all these extra dimensions should concern scientists, by the way, is because of the decades-long search for a Unified Field Theory, a comprehensive theory which integrates all known forces of the Universe. These extra dimensions are being used as mathematician's language to describe aspects of theory which would otherwise have no descriptors in English. Einstein spent much of his latter years working unsuccessfully to develop this Unified Field Theory, so there is now quite a stir among physicists with the suggestion that the Klien-Kaluza Theory which Davies discusses may be a workable Unified Field Theory. In the process, it has been renamed the Grand Unified Theory, or GUT. There are several varieties of GUT's, but the Klien-Kaluza is the most successful model).

In fact, I believe that these tiny dimensions could conceivably co-exist with our normal 3-d world just as does the massless (and dimensionless?) neutrino. The neutrino is proposed to be a by-product of the radioactive electrons given off during decay of the nucleus of a radioactive atom.<sup>2</sup> The neutrino can, according to theory, penetrate through enormous volumes of otherwise "solid" matter. Moreover, it can remain within the same space and occupy the same area at the same time as another physical object before disappearing. Although this seems to contradict our usual ways of thinking about the word "solid," the strange abilities of the neutrino have been both theorized and scientifically documented under laboratory conditions.<sup>3</sup>

On the other hand, a potential "other" dimension that would be normal sized might co-exist with ours as a sympathetic oscillator of an extremely high frequency. If our 3-d space and this other dimension alternated their physical manifestations - which show up and are measured as oscillation and frequency - to us in this way, one dimension might be visible while the other stayed invisible. The vibration might be such an astronomically high frequency that either one of the manifestations would appear "continuous" to even the most sensitive observation instruments within it. Both "spaces" could still share the same subatomic particles in the construction of each one's material world. The nature of these subatomic particles would in themselves determine oscillation and frequency more than be affected by them. Reality on the time sharing plan, if you please. If space, matter, and gravitational fields are quantized, perhaps Time is too.

NOTES

1.) A more comprehensive discussion of the theory discussed in Science Digest can be found in Davies' new book, Superforce: The Search for a Grand Unified Theory of Nature, Simon and Schuster, New York, 1984.

2.) Nuclear Radiation Physics, 3rd ed. by Lapp and Andrews; Prentice Hall, 1963.

3.) The Atomic Nucleus by R. Evans, McGraw-Hill, 1955.

The Un-Surprise Attack on Pearl Harbor

by Richard H. Crum

Nothing could have been less a surprise than what happened at Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941. Moreover, when that has been said, we have not even begun to suggest the infamy involved or the person on whom it must be totally placed.

The facts I am about to collate and relate have not been easy to dig out. Every effort has been made by the authorities to bury them and to destroy the salient records. For example, the archives at Suitland, Maryland, consisting of nearly 100 volumes of State Department material covering 1936—1940, and the loose material for 1941, are chopped up so badly that when one holds up a book by the binding, bits of paper rain out like confetti. There is irrefutable evidence that other papers have been rewritten and revised.

Many of the facts, however, have been available in the media, sometimes interred in the back pages of newspapers, isolated from the context which gives them relevance; 185,000 pages were declassified in 1981.

Any person who brings these scattered data together, discerns their necessary relevance to one another and lays them out for all to see opens himself to the criticism of bringing King Charles' head to every party to which he is invited. What reply can such a writer make? At least he can point out that very few who accept consensus history seem faintly aware of one basic paradox that imperils historical explication. In all Establishment history, in particular, distortion that flows from selective emphasis, innuendo and significant omission is so integral a part of the recital as to be almost impossible to disentangle from the data. The result can be, and commonly is, that every stated fact is true, and yet the entire treatment (neglecting to convey the emotional climate of the period, for example) is one monumental lie. This serious charge has to be leveled against all traditional accounts of U.S. diplomacy in the years preceding Pearl Harbor. Accounts of the Pearl Harbor attack itself are flagrantly open to the devastating indictment of tendentious omission in the highest degree.

The conventional account is a conspicuous instance that just as the Constitution is what the justices say it is, so history describes events as if they had come about in the way the mandarins of the Establishment wish they had. The present piece is not intended as a position-paper either for or against any particular school of political evaluation — interventionist, consensual, pacifist, etc. — but solely as an attempt rationally to trace the course of events as they actually happened.

On January 24, 1941, Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox addressed a letter to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson which stated: "... it is believed easily possible that hostilities would be initiated by a surprise attack upon the fleet or the naval base at Pearl Harbor." Three days later, Joseph C. Grew, American ambassador to Japan, sent a coded message to the State Department laying before them the information he had received from Tomura and Saburo that the Japanese admiralty has decided on an attack on Pearl Harbor." Secretary of State Cordell Hull states in his diary that he passed this priceless tip on to "a higher authority." Thereupon the Division of Naval Intelligence, on orders from someone, put out a memorandum counseling that it "places no credence in these rumors." (!) But the Navy's big boss, as we have seen, had already heard the same thing from some inside source, and considered it far more than a rumor.

Then, during the summer of 1941, Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, in charge of Pacific operations, demanded of the President to know, point blank, whether he actually expected war. The Presidential reply was in the affirmative: yes, there would be war, and it would begin with an attack by the Japanese.

Roosevelt's contemptuous treatment (as we shall see) of the Japanese peace-envoys, Kichisaburo Nomura and Saburo Kurosu, was the intended catalyst, and it worked. That secret cable to Nimitz was dispatched in the wake of the Boston address to the American people in which Roosevelt flatly declared: "And while I am talking to you fathers and mothers, I give you one more assurance. I have said this to you before, and I shall say it to you again and again. Your boys are not going to be sent into any foreign war!" (October 30, 1940)

New evidence has surfaced as to how ample were the warnings that the attack was imminent. Michigan State University historians John F. Bratzel and Leslie B. Rout, Jr., writing in the American Historical Review, December, 1982, show that the F.B.I. received a double warning more than three months before that the Japanese were planning a surprise Air attack on the U.S. fleet at Pearl Harbor. This sensational material later "disappeared" from sight so completely that John Toland was unable to crack the coverup even for Infamy, his classic work on Pearl Harbor. Forty-one years later, the two Michigan researchers were able to use the Freedom of Information Act to pry from the F.B.I. and the Hyde Park, N.Y., Presidential library files a story that almost surpasses belief. In 1939 German intelligence in Yugoslavia recruited a Mediterranean playboy, Dusko Popov, to spy for them in England (code-name Ivan). The German Abwehr (Intelligence) didn't know that under the code-name Tricycle Popov was working for the British as a double agent when he accepted German money to set up a spying in the United States.

Upon his arrival in New York, Popov was met by top agents of the F.B.I. who grilled him for days. In his memoirs, Popov said that one of his first statements to the F.B.I. bureau chief John Foxworth was: "You can expect an attack on Pearl Harbor before the end of the year..." Popov held two pieces of evidence to back up his warning. One was a verbal communique from the German attache in Tokyo, who had escorted Japanese naval officers to the Gulf of Taranto where British warplanes from the HMS Illustrious had devastated the Italian fleet in November, 1940. The Japanese wanted to know all about the attack in intimate detail. Popov's German sources saw this as plain proof that their Asian ally was planning to duplicate the British feat.

Even more indisputable was the hard evidence of the telegram in Popov's possession when he came to New York. Hidden on the face of the telegram was a microdot message to Popov asking for defense information pertaining to military and naval installations that ringed the American base at Pearl Harbor. The Japanese, via their German intermediaries, wanted sketches showing the exact locations of Hickam, Wheeler and Kaneohe airfields. They likewise wanted maps of all Pearl Harbor defenses and detailed data about dredging, depth of water, torpedo nets, anchorages and the like.

F.B.I. director J. Edgar Hoover then interviewed Popov himself. He passed the microdot message, with its unmistakable warning, to the the White House, the Division of Military Intelligence and the Office of Naval Intelligence. These top sensitive and policy-making councils, and the President, therefore became knowledgeable about the impending attack more than three months before the event.

Four days before the event at Pearl Harbor, diplomatic dispatches reported to the President sudden feverish activity in the Axis capitals — Tokyo, Berlin and Rome. Captured documents published simultaneously in London and Berlin on November 18, 1964 show that on Wednesday, December 3, 1941, the Japanese ambassador called on Mussolini and informed him that nothing was to be gained by further talks in Washington. He likewise informed the Italian dictator that an attack by Japan on American military installations was imminent. Mussolini and Hitler both pledged to declare war the moment that happened.

Roosevelt, who in effect had supported the Japanese military operations for four years in China, in defiance of tremendous opposition in Congress and furious protests from the country at large, licensing for shipment to the aggressor immense quantities of steel, copper, scrap and other vital materials of war, now suddenly changed signals, demanded the impossible, that the Japanese lose face completely by immediately removing their forces from China: a requirement so unrealistically absurd that it had to be made in secret, for he knew that in the circumstances no Japanese government could meet it and remain in office. Even so, the Japanese acceded to several of our demands and made genuine and prolonged efforts to reach a peaceful understanding with the United States. The two Japanese envoys were still trying, at the last minute, to continue negotiations (Wohlstetter p. 207). The probabilities are that at this point the Japanese military was no longer under the jurisdiction of the diplomatic corps. Nomura reported on his repatriation as well as in his telegrams that the United States had resolved on war with Japan. There was no doubt that Japan had alternatives only of war or total surrender (Togo p. 181). The tone of the Secretary of State became increasingly abusive. Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson confided to his diary the hope that a Japanese first strike would come to provide a precipitating cause for U.S. entry into the war. After it came, one cabinet member is reported to have said on leaving the President's study, "I think the boss really feels more relief than he has had for weeks." (Burns p. 461) When questioned later about the Pearl Harbor event, Roosevelt said, "Now the unity of the American people is assured." (Hashimoto p. 112)

It is obvious that by mid-summer, 1941, Roosevelt had already decided to bait the Japanese in whatever way was possible. Without consulting the Senate, he abrogated by executive order the 1911 trade-treaty with Japan. This was followed on July 26 by embargoing materials essential to life for the Japanese people, a nation of seventy millions crowded into an area the size of California, possessing the natural resources of the state of Mississippi and completely dependent on imports of raw materials and international trade.

Economic strangulation was reinforced by a subtler form of pressure: baiting the trap at Pearl Harbor with the appearance — even the actuality — of vulnerability. Admiral James O. Richardson, commander of the Pacific naval forces at Pearl Harbor, paid an urgent call, in the summer of 1941, on Admiral Harold Stark, Chief of Naval Operations, in Washington, to protest the order to weaken his forces by the continuing removal of destroyers, oilers and some aircraft carriers. Referred to the White House, Admiral Richardson presented his argument that it was dangerous to reduce the defensive fighting strength of the armed forces in Pearl Harbor at that time. The President seemed detached, unresponsive. Richardson pounded on the President's desk and exclaimed, "The orders to reduce my strength at Pearl Harbor have got to be canceled, Mr. President!" He received a vague reply, and shortly thereafter he was replaced as commander at Pearl Harbor by Admiral Husband E. Kimmel, who likewise pleaded not to have the defenses of the all-important outpost needlessly impaired, but in vain. Washington continued the process of erosion right down to the moment of the "surprise" attack.

What could possibly have motivated such a policy as this — at once treasonable, suicidal and in defiance of common sense? A telltale piece of evidence surfaced on November 15, 1945, when Secretary of War Stimson, testifying before the Congressional investigating committee concerning top secret White House meetings on November 25, 1941, read from his diary a statement Roosevelt made on that occasion: "The President said that the Japanese were notorious for making an attack without warning... In spite of the risk involved, however, in letting the Japanese fire the first shot, we realized that in order to have the full support of the American people, it was desirable to make sure that the Japanese be the ones to do this..."

Admiral Kimmel spent 27 years of his retirement studying the records and interviewing everyone who had any inside contacts with high government officials in Washington on that "day of infamy." He concluded that the commander at Pearl Harbor were victims of a criminal conspiracy by Franklin D. Roosevelt, General George C. Marshall, Chief of Staff, and Winston Churchill. Startling as this finding seems, it appears to be the only explanation that fits the known facts. And why was the demand by the commanders at Pearl Harbor for a public trial never granted?

General George Catlett Marshall, top man at the Pentagon, whose memory was reputed to be unusually keen, could never remember where he was on the most important occasion of his professional life — the night before Pearl Harbor! Surgeons today have a way of reactivating memory by opening the skull, exposing the brain and, while the patient is fully conscious, asking certain questions as they apply a gentle current to one part of the brain after another by means of an electrode. One regrets that the good general was not given the benefit of this therapy. American history might be the gainer. To admit that at this most crucial moment he was out of touch would have been impossible; to admit that he was at one of the command centers and did nothing would have brought down the whole crazy and indeed criminal structure of rationale for our entry into World War II.

You've heard the quip: A spy is a person with a code in the head. By that cold December day, our fellows already had the Japanese dead to rights. They had their adversaries' cipher down in black and white. A machine had been devised to decode top Japanese diplomatic messages, known to the Washington cryptologists as "Purple." Beginning on October 9, 1941, the Pentagon had been monitoring every word; they were in on everything, right down to the hour of the attack. At 2:30 P.M., December 6, key personnel in Washington were examining a detailed account, flashed to Japanese naval and air units, describing American ship disposition at the base. Pearl Harbor was not notified.

American authorities in Washington had learned from decoded messages that when this order was transmitted, HIGASHI NO KAZEAME, meaning "East Wind Rain," it constituted a naval and military directive: HOSTILE ACTION AGAINST THE UNITED STATES. On Thursday, December 4, the WINDS message was flashed five times in close succession to all Japanese air and naval squadrons in the Pacific. It must have been received in Washington within seconds. Washington therefore knew that the imperial aircraft carrier task-force with its complement of bombers was on its way. A rendezvous area 200 miles from Hawaii was to be the launching scene.

If the forces of Admiral Kimmel and General Short had been properly alerted to the oncoming Japanese attack, the Japanese commander, Isoroku Yamamoto, had specific orders to withdraw his entire expedition to safe waters. Admiral Kimmel, according to Curtis B. Dall, F.D.R.'s son-in-law, was later informed of this by the Japanese admiral himself.

About 5 P.M., Thursday, December 4, Australian time (December 3, Washington time), Col. Van S. Merle-Smith, U.S. military attache in Melbourne, was summoned to a conference with the Dutch liaison officer from Jakarta. He was there informed of a message received from the Dutch navy that the Japanese had crossed into the Eastern Pacific with forces so massive that the Dutch had already put into operation the pre-arranged ABCD and Rainbow—5 (A—2) plan, as it was called, to help the U.S. Navy repel this formidable action. Merle-Smith transmitted this information to Washington, where with some delay it was received Thursday evening, Washington time, December 4. Arriving in code, it must have been a matter of top priority at the Pentagon and the White House itself. In both places the response was absolute silence. So far as is known, no one — certainly not the commanders at Pearl Harbor — was notified of its existence until five hours after the bombing of Pearl Harbor, three days later.

Evidence that American authorities were completely conversant with the Japanese secret diplomatic code may be found in Ladislav Farago's revealing account of how the code was broken (The Broken Seal; Random House, 1967). Mr. Farago, who served in U.S. Naval Intelligence in World War II, traces the incredible duplicity of the American authorities in conniving to bring about Pearl Harbor. This book will make any honest patriot's ears burn for a whole lifetime. Exhaustive corroboration of the same data is provided by David Kahn's The Codebreakers (New York, Macmillan, 1967). Mr. Kahn's records in depth how the code was broken.

Beginning about 18 hours before the attack on Hawaii, there was transmitted, in the diplomatic code mentioned above, a 14-part communication from Tokyo to its two special negotiators in Washington laying the groundwork for a formal breaking off of diplomatic relations with the United States. Intercepted and decoded, this document was sent to the President, General Marshall and Admiral Harold Stark. As to the first 13 parts, foreshadowing an immediate break with the United States which was to come with Part 14 at 1 P.M., Washington time, December 7, those 13 parts had reached the Office of Naval Intelligence and been decoded by about 10:30 P.M., December 6 (Wohlstetter p. 309). Marshall testified he was studying the intercept at about 11 A.M. the following morning, 6 A.M. Honolulu time, an hour before the attack. He knew that when the 14th part arrived "things might happen." Yet he delayed sending a warning message to General Short at Pearl Harbor until 11:50 A.M. And then he routed it as a commercial telegram via Western Union to San Francisco and thence by Radio Corporation of America to Hawaii! (Burtness & Ober p. 170—171) Queried at a Congressional hearing why he did not use direct Army radio telephone, available with instant scrambler, to reach Short in time, Marshall at first said that would have been "time-consuming." Later on in his testimony he gave a different story: he preferred teletype, which at that moment (we are told) was "in-operative."

General Albert C. Wedemeyer, international trouble-shooter and a top war-planner, recalls in his memoirs, Wedemeyer Reports, the sworn testimony given to a Congressional investigating committee by Commander L.R. Schulz, the young naval officer who rushed to the White House with the decoded translation of the first 13 parts. It was placed on the President's desk in the Oval Office about 11 P.M., December 6, in the presence of Presidential adviser Harry Hopkins. Roosevelt perceived immediately what the total document signified and exclaimed, "This means war!" Hopkins said it was "too bad" the United States "could not strike the first blow." F.D.R. replied, "No, you can't do that. We are a democracy and a peaceful people, but we have a good record." Schulz, who did not report this conversation until four years later, interpreted it to mean we could not make the first overt move.

At this time it was about 6 P.M. at Pearl Harbor. No move was made to warn the commanders there of the impending disaster which struck shortly after 7 the following morning. Qualified naval observers have stated that the hours between 6 P.M. and 7 A.M. would have been ample for Admiral Kimmel to alert the anti-aircraft batteries, send up the fighter planes and move the major vessels out of the harbor.

At an undetermined time December 6 or 7, Admiral Stark, unable to endure or believe the flagrant malfeasance he saw unfolding before him, communicated his sense of outrage to General Marshall and thundered, "We have got to radio Kimmel, and alert him!" Marshall said, "No, let's not. It might be detected by the Japanese, and complicate things. I'll wire him later."

The timing of the delivery of the 14th part to Secretary of State Cordell Hull, which recipients of the first 13 parts were told would be about 1 P.M. (Washington time), December 7, made it evident that this would contain the formal declaration of a rupture in relations, even though this was implicit in the entire text of the preceding parts.

Several hours after the attack, a Japanese bicycle messenger delivered to Kimmel and Short the alert from General Marshall. Ignoring naval radio, Pentagon wireless telephone and F.B.I. communication facilities, Marshall (as we have seen) had chosen to send the commanders of the crucial outpost a commercial Western Union telegram! Incredibly, orders for a full war alert had been sent, by naval radio, to the Panama Canal Zone and the Philippines. No word of alarm or caution had been sent to Pearl Harbor, the probable target of the assault.

General Douglas MacArthur, in the Philippines, commenced immediate military operations. Hours later, Washington's treason reached its culmination. Unwarned, Pearl Harbor was the proverbial sitting duck. Franklin Delano Roosevelt and George Catlett Marshall could write "Mission accomplished." 3,303 American boys were bombed to death or perished below deck. Eight battleships and twelve other craft were sunk or hopelessly damaged in the worst military disaster in American history.

Long before, the President of this peace-loving nation had set aside the East Room of the White House as his "war room." As Burnt Balchen records in War below Zero, he had in actuality entered the war secretly on a personal basis long ago, by ordering the depth-bombing of German underwater craft in the open Atlantic.

* * *

Now Roosevelt had the war for which, while pretending to do the opposite, he had labored long and arduously. You will find full documentation for all this and much more in several scholarly and authoritative works enumerated at the end of this piece [if one wishes to obtain the extensive bibliography please write the author in care of Critique]. Secretary of State Hull, Roosevelt himself, Secretaries of War Stimson and Nave Knox and the entire General Staff all had compelling evidence that Japan would strike at the time and place she did. The diplomacy they had pursued made war inevitable, and they knew it. When Roosevelt heard the news of the actual bombing in a phone-call from Secretary Knox, A.A. Hoehling reports, "In a curious paradox, he seemed to be expecting the 'unexpected thing.' " (p.188) In fact, the President expressed to Chinese ambassador Hu Shih, with whom he was in conference at the White House between 12:30 P.M. and 1:10 P.M., December 7, his expectation that something "nasty" would happen within forty-eight hours. He was aware that Japan was in process of taking "some action that would mean war." (Feis p.339—340)

The American people were horrified to learn they had been dragged into a war from which their elected leader had promised to safeguard them "again and again." Immediately there ensued a hunt for official scapegoats. A handicapped "investigating" committee returned, after one month and nine days, a verdict that General Short and Admiral Kimmel were solely responsible. They demanded a court martial; their petition was refused.

General Walter C. Short maintained until his death, in 1949, that he had not received any advance warning whatsoever. No record of anyone's having sent him or Kimmel any timely information of the impending attack, or even of the perilous nature of the "negotiations," was ever produced. Admiral Husband E. Kimmel, from his place of retirement at Groton, Connecticut, published from his diary a detailed and well documented account which records that he was officially warned against making precautionary preparations, "lest it invite a Japanese attack." Meanwhile, on orders from Washington and despite his protests, his forces were being steadily reduced. Roosevelt, he was later told on inquiry to these same official sources, had confided to them that an attack on Pearl Harbor was "necessary."

Roosevelt had long been in secret communication with the government of warring Britain, which had been persuaded to rebuff private overtures toward peace from the enemy by Roosevelt's top-secret promises of United States intervention. These messages, later revealed in part by Tyler Kent, decoding clerk at the U.S. embassy in London, cynically flouted the expressed will of the American people, who had just elected F.D.R. on his promise to keep us out of war. Congressional mail and every poll showed the people overwhelmingly opposed (as much as 10 to 1) to intervention in Europe's latest war. Documents and papers made public finally by the British government on January 1, 1972 (see The New York Times, January 2, 1972) show that in spite of this the President was continuing to flood the British cabinet with entreaties against a negotiated peace.

To corroborate all this you can go to the library and read the boastful journal of Col. William Stephenson. Stephenson was secretly sent to this country from England in 1940, at the suggestion of the Administration, with express orders to co-ordinate the propaganda campaign to project the United States into war. He arrived with an elaborate prefabricated plan of strategy to make monkeys of American newspaper men and radio commentators and political leaders who failed to go along with the grand design, and that is what he proceeded to do. Those who spoke of the practical alternative of letting Hitler and Stalin exhaust each other, those who said the obvious thing, that to fight one despot would only strengthen the other, were called "Copperheads" and "Irresponsibles."

The British ruling class was patently in an especially favorable position to be aware of what the man from Hyde Park, New York was up to. Joseph P. Lash, in his arrantly pro-Roosevelt screed, Roosevelt and Churchill, records that Lord Halifax, British ambassador to Washington, told Churchill that the President had confided that his "perpetual problem" was to steer a course between the wish of 70 percent of Americans to keep out of war and the wish of 30 percent to break Hitler at whatever cost. Pearl Harbor, of course, put an end to the need for this vexatiously intricate maneuvering.

Our British cousins had been victimized by their government in a way that was quite comparable to that then under way at the hands of F.D.R. Contrary to what our history books tell us, it was the British, not the Germans, who initiated the practice of bombing centers of civilian population. As F.J.P. Veale notes in Advance to Barbarism, the British government itself admitted this in a book which it commissioned and approved, published in 1953. The book, Bombing Vindicated (London, 1944), by J.M. Spaight, First Assistant Air Minister, provides all the details of those first provocations over West Germany on May 11, 1940. The British government instituted the bombing of civilians, according to this highly placed authority, in order to provoke Hitler and the German generals into civilian bombings of their own, in retaliation, so that British subjects could more easily be whipped into a war fever, necessary to sustain a long war against Germany.

On November 7, 1941, the day on which the President drafted a radio address assuring the people that his country was doing everything possible to maintain peace, Roosevelt secretly sent one of his most trusted associates to William Stephenson with a private message for the British Prime Minister. As reported later by Montgomery Hyde, friend of Stephenson and well-known British publicist and historian, Stephenson's resulting telegram to His Majesty's government read: "Negotiations (with the two Japanese emissaries) off. Expect military actions within two weeks." Electrified, London wired back, secretly: "What is your source?" Stephenson replied: "The President of the United States."

The secret ultimatum was delivered to the two Japanese negotiators in Washington on November 26, 1941. After that, it was only a matter of time — of a very short time indeed. Yet neither General Short nor Admiral Kimmel at Pearl Harbor was kept informed of the progress of the "negotiations" or advised of the ultimatum.

* * * *

Long and artful maneuvering, unknown to the American people, or even to the military commanders to whom their safety was entrusted, was reaching its intended climax. Japan, whom Roosevelt had assisted in her invasion of China by licensing the export of scrap and strategic materials, was handed a sudden extreme demand which she could not accept and save face: Get out of China, completely, at once.

We had been kicked into a terrible war to recoup the fading political fortunes of one man — dragged in, as historian C.C. Tansill puts it, "through the back door." Churchill recorded that when he heard the news of Pearl Harbor he had his first good night's sleep. Roosevelt was undertaking, by a President's war, the flesh-rending job, as H.L. Mencken remarked, of "pulling ashore the corpse of the British Empire."

The deliberate plan to induce Japan to attack the United States was common knowledge in diplomatic circles, but it has been regarded as a breach of "ethics" to mention it. While the Japanese were being goaded to fury in the field of diplomacy, the Rockefeller-Soviet dominated Institute of Pacific Relations and a Communist spy-ring, with money from the same sources, was treasonously representing to the Japanese warlords that if the U.S. fleet were to be destroyed at Pearl Harbor, the United States would be knocked out of the war.

Captain Oliver Lyttleton, Minister of Production in Winston Churchill's cabinet, stated before Parliament on July 20, 1944, "Japan was provoked into attacking America at Pearl Harbor. It is a travesty on history to say that America was forced into the war." Equally significant is the statement given by Eleanor Roosevelt to Kathleen McLaughlin in an interview published in The New York Times Magazine, October 8, 1944, about Pearl Harbor: "December 7, was just like any other D-Day to us. We clustered at the radio and waited for more details — but it was far from the shock it proved to the country in general. We had expected something of the sort for a long time." In circles of money, privilege and media-manipulation, the word was not surprise but satisfaction, or rather elation. Frances Bolton, ranking Republican member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, wrote to Brooks Emeny, husband of Nelson Rockefeller's cousin, Winifred and a Rockefeller agent in the operation of the internationalist Foreign Policy Association, that she and her associates awaited and "celebrated" the dastardly act at Pearl Harbor.

The rationale for this shame of all shames, as confected by war-loving intellectuals and consensus historians, is memorably refuted by Robinson Jeffers in his long narrative poem, The Love and the Hate:

*Don't say Pearl Harbor, though That was a trick, a dirty one.
They had duped us Deep into war, they'd fooled us into doing everything Except declare it and send armies abroad ...
And don't pretend that the world Will be improved, or good will earned, or peace Made perfect by blasting cities and nations into bloody choppets, if you believe that You'll believe anything.*

It is understandable that the German people, subjected to long humiliation, and the American people, racked by a prolonged economic depression, should be duped into fiery outrage. What is unpardonable and infamous is that respected historians whom we have considered reliable should continue to peddle the clustered lie.

The nine ostensible investigations of Pearl Harbor are summarized by Percy Greaves, Jr. in Perpetual War for Perpetual Peace, edited by Harry Elmer Barnes. There were systematic coverups. The petty burglary of Watergate pales into utter insignificance compared with Pearl Harbor, where thirty-three hundred soldiers, sailors and marines lost their lives and hundreds of millions of property damage resulted. Yet Watergate was blazoned across every front page in flaming headlines for two whole years. Contrast the disappearance of originals and all copies of many vital Pearl Harbor intercepts and other intelligence messages, the historical blackout on the truth about Pearl Harbor by scheming or naive commentators and about the world havoc issuing from the war of 1939—1945, carried to its "victorious" conclusion — a war begun to "free Poland" and ended with doubling the area of the globe degraded into the gray and faceless anonymity of Communism.

Still the wonder grows. When will there be decent, loyal Americans in Washington who will demand that a formal public investigation of this, the most monstrous scandal in our history, place these facts officially before the man in the street, so that those multitudes will not have died totally in vain and that the living may know the truth? Assuredly, Pearl Harbor would never have happened if we had had the Fifth Freedom: freedom from the vaulting ambition of the thirty-second President.

And he hath come whose part Is the crafty vengeance of stealthy attack. -- Aeschylus, Eumenides

* * * *

Why should it be necessary to record these facts which bring shame not only on the perpetrators but on all of us? For they and we, alas, belong to the same race of men. This brutal tale must be told for the 300 million human beings who suffered and were buried as the price of that bloody carnage, that unspeakable but totally useless holocaust. This is my faith: that the truth will exert a therapeutic effect on the society of the future. We shall come to understand that, by turning our backs on these matters, many of which were either known or strongly suspected, American citizens who lived through the Roosevelt years were in part responsible for those frightful crimes and outrages on human flesh and spirit.

Here is a problem for the people to face. How deadly are the consequences of a civilization in which power, wielded by a fallible few, once limited to an arrow's throw, can now extinguish the lives of millions?

To right the wrongs that were done, to bring back the dead, retract the agony, restore the ruined and enslaved nations, to bring the arch-criminals to justice, is now impossible. Yet to right the record, to place on the pages of history what really happened, is far from a pathetic futility. Such, at least, must be the faith of a historian in the importance of truth.

---

An expanded version of the above will appear in Richard H. Crum's book Rethinking History: The War Myth from Pericles to Roosevelt to be published in Autumn, 1985 via Vesta Publications, Ltd., Box 1641, Cornwall, Ontario, K6H 5V6, Canada.

Golitsyn: the KGB Defector

by Robin Ramsay

One of the recurring sub-themes of the literature on intelligence systems in the West in the past decade has been the status of the claims made by KGB defector Golitsyn. Until recently all the book-reading public knew about Golitsyn was (a) that he has exposed some (relatively minor) Soviet operations; (b) made a series of quite-bizarre sounding claims to the effect that the divisions within the Communist bloc were a device to mislead the capitalist states in the West; and (c) that the KGB had achieved high-level penetration of all the West's intelligence services.

Golitsyn's views were apparently accepted by some intelligence officers in the West - notably James Angleton, until 1974 head of CIA's Counter Intelligence division - and mole hunting became the order of the day. In America, for example, this was reflected by Edward Epstein (one of Angleton's most devoted followers) in his book Legend; in this country via the likes of MI5 channels like Chapman Pincher, the 'Fourth Man' episode, and the so-called Hollis affair.

Golitsyn now has a book out, New Lies For Old (London 1984), written with "the help of Western intelligence officials" (Sunday Times 11th March), and actually two ex members of MI5 and (I believe) two ex members of CIA Counter Intelligence. One of the MI5 members, Arthur Martin, is part of the Hollis business.

The book itself is appalling, turgid, repetitive, barely documented and, most of all, a lot of bloody nonsense. I can't claim to have read it all (to do that I would need a large bribe), and for any one who wants an accurate sample of it, the extracts published in the Sunday London Times (11th and 18th March) are entirely representative of the larger work.

Golitsyn offers a gigantic conspiracy theory the like of which is rarely found outside the fantasies of the loony right-wing (or parodies of that, such as Wilson/Shea's spoof Illuminatus trilogy). That was written through a series of stupendous giggling fits: Golitsyn means it, or, at any rate, pretends to mean it.

Golitsyn's thesis is simple. The Soviet Union's ruling elite are totally clever, in control, and totally devious. Nothing is what it seems. Anti-party group are really disguised party group. The 'Prague Spring' was organised by the Soviet party: the Sino-Soviet, Yugoslav-Soviet, Albania-Soviet, Rumanian-Soviet splits are all phoneys, part of some long-range disinformation strategy to con the West. And so on. As soon as you get Golitsyn's drift the book becomes immensely wearisome and predictable. Here's a beautiful example of his 'methodology' (his word), from the Sunday Times extract 11th March.

Solidarity, Golitsyn says, "while carefully controlled by the Government, had to appear to have been set up from below. The origins of the Solidarity in the shipyard bearing Lenin's name, the singing of the International, the use of the old slogan 'worker of the world unite' by Solidarity members, are all consistent with concealed Party guidance of the organization."

This "technique" is applied to everything. The main reason he appears to give for his disbelief in the reality of the "Prague Spring" is that Dubcek and Co. didn't go far enough in ridding themselves of the old guard. The fact that they left many of them in place isn't indicative of any anxiety to forestall a Soviet invasion, but, for Golitsyn, a sure sign that the Party, the old guard, are still in control. And so on. The European Communist Parties used to show their loyalty to the Soviet Union by their willingness to accept constantly changing lines issued from the Kremlin. Golitsyn has gone one better: he is following the development of "lines" that only he can perceive.

The odd thing about all this is that it rarely seems to have dawned on our friends in counter intelligence that Golitsyn might have been sent from the Soviet Union precisely to spread these ridiculous fantasies of the omnipotence of the Soviet Union in general, and the KGB in particular, announce the certain existence of KGB "moles" in all the West's intelligence services and set everybody off tearing themselves into bits looking for that illusive Soviet "mole".

That this has been Golitsyn's main achievement is demonstrable: that it was the intention is unproven.

In a recent essay, The Shadow of The Mole (in Harper's (US) October '83), Ron Rosenbaum presents an elegant version of the thesis of Golitsyn as plant. Or, more accurately, he presents Golitsyn as part of an older, more complex game designed to mess up James Angleton's head. Boiled down, Rosenbaum suggests that WAY back in the 1950's, Philby was the sharp end of a plan to confirm and exacerbate Angleton's paranoia about the omnipotence of the KGB, a plan whose climax was exposing Angleton's already powerful paranoid tendencies to Golitsyn - who confirmed every one of them in spades.

(This account does Rosenbaum little justice. His essay is extremely clever and runs through all the possible permutations of the Philby/Angleton relationship: Philby as KGB, pretending to be M16; Philby as M16 pretending to be KGB while pretending to be M16; Angleton as KGB; and so on. The whole "wilderness of mirrors" is laid out in acute detail.)

What Rosenbaum singularly fails to point out - what almost every one fails to point out - is that none of this really matters a jot. The intelligence "game" is just that, a game. If those authors close to the US/UK intelligence services are to be believed, the Angleton/Golitsyn/mole hunt episode has paralysed chunks of British and US intelligence for much of the past 20 years. Yet what has happened? The real world seems to have gone on without them. During this period, say 1960 - 1975 when (apparently) the West's counter intelligence services were penetrated by the KGB, Western Europe and the US, far from being "Finlandized" or GDR-ized, far from drifting slowly into the Soviet orbit, saw the beginning of the right-wing moves which now see Thatcher, Kohl and Reagan in power.

To this mere book-reading outsider one of the odder features of the great "mole hunt" has been the contrast between the wilder stories told by Golitsyn and those of another ex Soviet bloc intelligence defector, Goliniewski.

Golitsyn defects, blows some Soviet operations, tells his new allies that they have been penetrated by the KGB, and then, as the final chapter pulls out some version of his Super-Cunning-USSR number. Most (apparently) don't buy the latter thesis - although Angleton and some others in counter intelligence do. No matter, the rest of his claims are believed and the "mole hunt" commences.

Goliniewski defects, blows some (perhaps a great many) Soviet operations, tells his listeners that the KGB has penetrated everything, and then adds (a) that Henry Kissinger is a Soviet agent and (b) he, Goliniewski, is in fact the surviving son of the last Czar of Russia, and that contrary to all reports the Russian Royal family weren't murdered by the Bolsheviks.

This latter claim is dismissed by almost everybody and Angleton in particular, and the CIA in general, consign Goliniewski to the outer darkness as a probable disinformation agent.

It would be interesting to know why, for on the face of it, of the two competing sets of claims it is Golitsyn's which is the harder to swallow. Goliniewski's claims are not that bizarre in retrospect. Kissinger was just a minor American academic on the fringes of Washington when he was identified as KGB by Goliniewski; and why not a deal between the Czar and the Bolsheviks? The Summers/Mangold book certainly makes a plausible case for it happening.<sup>1</sup>

The threads of this story crop up all over the place, even in staid British party politics, for Jeremy Thorpe and Peter Bessell got involved in the hunt for the Czar (and the presumed Czarist millions.) Mae Brussell, for one, learning of the Thorpe/Bessell/Scott episode immediately jumped to the conclusion that it had something to do with the Czar thing - a delightful idea for which, alas, there is not a shred of evidence.

"The great mole hunt" makes fascinating reading but its real significance is not obvious. What is significant is the fact that a number of senior MI5 and CIA men could actually bring themselves to even consider Golitsyn thesis, telling us that they are (or were - most of them seem to have retired or been retired) a bunch of paranoid fruit-cakes. But then a group which has persuaded itself that the British Left is worth surveillance and disruption will believe anything. Meanwhile, somewhere on the outskirts of Moscow, groups of Soviet government officials will be meeting to have a good laugh over Golitsyn's book, demonstrating their dedication to the cause of "world communism" with conspicuous consumption of Marlboro cigarettes, designer jeans, coke and video tapes of Michael Jackson's Thriller - just like their US counterparts.

NOTES

1. Anthony Summers and Tom Mangold, The Hunt for The Czar (London 1976)

---

ROBIN RAMSAY is Editor of Lobster [17c Pearson Ave., Hull, HU5 2SX, UK].

The Universal Monetary Crisis

by Robert Severin

The current international banking system is in its worst shape since the Great Depression of the 1930's. When the bankers finally admit that there are cracks in the "very foundation of the banking system,"<sup>1</sup> it is enough to make anyone wonder what is really going on in the world of investment banking. Ever since Jesus threw the immoral money changers out of the Temple, the financiers have had powerful allies in high places.

The Italian Banco Ambrosiano/Vatican banking scandal exposed the fragile fabric of international finance to the world. (See the Bibliography) When the Italian government refused to save (bail out) the Banco Ambrosiano from collapse, it was not only the VATICAN that got NERVOUS. So did all of the cambists around the world. If it can happen in Italy, it can happen anywhere on the earth.

The possibility of global banking collapse is very real. As Penny Lernoux describes it in In Banks We Trust:

After the Banco Ambrosiano default, serious fears were expressed about the stability of the $1.8 trillion Eurocurrency market, which consists primarily of interbank transactions and is therefore susceptible to a chain reaction of bank failures<sup>2</sup>.

The Italian Treasury minister, Giulio Andreatta, tried to alert the financial world by stating "I think it's useful for the international community to know that banks are risky enterprises and that it's possible and necessary to evaluate risk."<sup>3</sup> It is revealing to know that banks are risky businesses.

What do banks like Banco Ambrosiano, Penn Square, Drysdale Securities, Continental Illinois and Chase Manhattan have in common with Mexico, Argentina and Brazil? They all have, or have had, big debt problems. Will the international bankers be able to collect their IOU's from these and other nations such as India? India, as the largest Third World debtor nation, has just been destabilized by the Indira GANDHI assassination. Brazil owed more than $100 Billion in 1983, and the total amount of the Third World debt is largely unknown.

How can countries repay such staggering debts? Even the United States, with its $1.6 trillion national debt, has the same problem as Michele Sindona and Roberto Calvi. That lofty amount is ignoring the incredible $7 trillion plus liabilities of the Federal Government's unfunded obligations, such as Social Security and retirement pensions for ex-government employees. What can a country with enormous debt do in ORDER to continue operating? Rollover. In order to repay the moneylenders, they must either borrow more money or go bankrupt.

If the USA (or any other country) was to auction off the entire real net worth/ASSETS of the country, they still would not be able to repay their debts and obligations. Social Security has no current hard assets—only government securities, (trust funds do not exist—all of the revenues are dumped into the U.S. Treasury) and is an enormous scam.<sup>4</sup> One is forced to ask: Where is the money to come from? When there is no lender of last resort, where do you go to borrow more money; or do you just print more?

When the International Monetary Fund (IMF— an international financial consortium largely supported by "loans" from the USA) met last year, The Spotlight reported that Ronald Reagan promised the debtor nations at least $50 billion to help them out.<sup>5</sup> As Penny Lernoux put it: "Ronald Reagan rides to their rescue with taxpayers' money."<sup>6</sup> The fundamental question must be asked: How long can we keep the world financiers and their Ponzi schemes afloat? Willard Cantelon (author of several books on world finance and member of the Committee on Monetary Reform in Washington, D.C.) freely admits that the United States must continue to inflate our money supply, due to the Federal Reserve banking system. At a recent meeting of the committee on Monetary Reform, two startling realities became painfully clear.<sup>7</sup>

Dr. Cantelon explained that even the top financial "experts" do not know how to salvage the world monetary system. If the leaders of the financial world cannot agree what must be done, who can? Our politicians are only now beginning to realize that increasing taxes incessantly will choke off economic recovery and growth. When you study a chart of the world's major economic powers, and their tax rates are compared to their economic growth rates, the nations with the lowest taxes are expanding fastest.

The other major problem/solution is the issuance of new currency; this Dr. Cantelon regards as inevitable (he remembers vividly the last devaluation of German currency). New Money! Many people say that it has already been printed, [According to Gary North it is being experimented with in Santa Ana, California] or know of someone who claims to have seen some. But the officials of the Federal Reserve refused to tell the committee on Monetary Reform anything about the plans for new money. will it have parity with the money we are using now? That is—will each dollar of old money be exchanged for one new dollar? Will you get one new dollar for every $10 or $100 of the old currency? No one knows—or if they do they will not tell us. There is a good possibility that the issuance of new money for a revised world banking/finance/commerce system will wreak havoc with our retirement savings. The possibilities are very frightening indeed.

NOTES

1. In Banks We Trust, by Penny Lernoux. 1984, Anchor Press/Doubleday, Garden City, New York.
2. Ibid.
3. Ibid.
4. Ibid.
5. The Spotlight, pub. by Liberty Lobby, 300 Independence Ave., S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003.
6. In Banks We Trust, op cit.
7. Willard Cantelon, 12/30/84, speech at Calvary Community Church, San Jose, Calif.
8. In Banks We Trust, op cit.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Architects of Conspiracy*, by William P. Hoar. 1984, Western Islands, 395 Concord Ave., Belmont, Mass. 02178.
- Can You Trust Your Bank?*, by Robert Heller and Norris Willat. 1977, Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, N.Y.
- New Money or None?*, by Willard Cantelon. 1979, Logos Int'l., Plainfield, New Jersey 07060.
- In God's Name*, by David A. Yallop. 1984, Bantam Books, Inc. 666 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10103.
- The Vatican Connection*, by Richard Hammer. 1982, Holt, Rinehart & Winston, 383 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017.
- St. Peter's Banker: Michele Sindona*, by Luigi DiFonzo. 1983, Franklin Watts, London.
- God's Banker*, by Rupert Cornwell. 1983, Dodd, Mead & Co., Inc. 79 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y. 10016.

Michele Sindona and the Vatican Bank Scandal

by Peter Kross

When one thinks of high finance on an international scale, of money being transferred from holding companies in the Bahamas, Switzerland and Panama, the interested spectator usually turns to Wall St.

But recently international attention has been focused on Italy, right in the shadows of Vatican City, to one man, Michele Sindona, whose dealings cost not only the Catholic church millions of dollars but threatened a scandal that reached the inner courts of the pope himself.

Who is Michele Sindona and how did his secret dealings start a series of events that stretched across an ocean? Michele Sindona's background as a poor boy from the dirty streets of Sicily bely one important fact; the belief that he was destined to accomplish great things in life.

Michele was born on May 8, 1920, in Patti, Sicily. Like his later life his birth was a violent experience. Forceps had to be used on the cervical area around his head to insure his safe inception.

Life in Patti was difficult for young Michele. He had to fight for every scrap of food he received.

Their lives were tough, as difficult as the mountains that rose a thousand feet above the Tyrrhenian Sea.

Young Michele was raised by his beloved grandmother Nunziata. Nunziata was mother, protector, friend to Michele who followed her to the market and sat at night listening to the harsh stories about their existence in Patti.

When the Sindona's couldn't afford to buy gifts for Michele and his brother Enio, Nunziata would make a soccer ball out of old rags for Michele.

Often Michele and Nunziata would go to church where the elder lady would take her grandson to meet with the local bishop. The bishop plied Michele with fascinating stories about the church, its inner workings and the great amount of wealth that rested behind St. Peter's Square.

When they got back home Nunziata would tell young Michele that if he studied hard he too could share in the wealth that lay in Rome and make her very proud.

As a child, Michele suffered from a series of diseases that would afflict him the rest of his life. On orders from Nunziata, Michele never took drugs to relieve pain. He also contracted rheumatic fever and later came down with St. Vitus's dance in which he couldn't sleep, his body jerked uncontrollably. He also suffered into adulthood with violent migraine headaches and was treated by a psychiatrist for manic depression.

In 1938, at 18, Michele won a scholarship to the University of Messina. Four years later he graduated with a degree in tax law. While in school and after graduation, he worked as a real estate consultant and as a part-time bookkeeper.

As an undergraduate Michele rarely attended class, only showing up to take tests. He was imbued with a love of adventure and cards.

July 10, 1943, proved to be the start of Michele's new and secret life. On that day American and British troops with the help of the Mafia, occupied portions of Sicily.

Using his connections with the bishop of Patti, Michele bought a truck and delivered lemons to the starving people in the Messina region. Michele won the protection of Vito Genovese, a high ranking American Mafia leader who controlled the lucrative produce trade in the area.

Thus, a connection that would span an ocean and thirty years had begun.

In 1944, Michele helped with Rina Cilio, a girl he had known for many years. Along with his new bride, he started his own tax business operating out of their small apartment.

Four years later, with a daughter of three and another on the way, they moved to Milan where Michele had been given a letter of introduction to the pro-secretary of State for the Vatican, Giovanni Battista Montini, later to be named Pope Paul VI.

Michele quickly won over the churchman and Sindona began working with the Vatican first by raising money for the elderly and later becoming chief financial director to the Vatican.

His first venture for his new bosses at St. Peter's was the purchase of Milan's Banca Privata Finanziaria or BPF, for the Vatican. The Vatican acquired a majority of stock with Sindona owning a lesser share. But Sindona couldn't register the bank under the Vatican's name. Instead he used his newly made Swiss sources to hide the true owners of the institution. He named various banks, used in the transaction as proprietors in the transaction and secretly and illegally moved money from Italy to Switzerland. Thus, the Vatican made its first purchase using Sindona as their chief middleman.

In July 1961, Nunziata died, leaving Michele devastated. Following her death, Michele was treated for manic depression. He now turned to his daughter Maria Elisa as his new partner. Maria Elisa took Nunziata's place, listening to her father talk about the grand financial plans he was going to make.

Meanwhile, Michele was busy investing the Vatican's money in Swiss banks and gaining control of profitable business outside of Italy.

As his reputation as a financial wheeler-dealer grew, Sindona decided to expand his contacts to the United States.

By 1963, Sindona had made his first American purchase; the Libby, McNeil, Libby Co, a food processing firm that had international distribution. He had to make the Nestle Company a partner but he alone controlled all of Libby's affairs in Italy.

Later that year Sindona began his partnership with a secret society in Italy called the Masonic Lodge and headed by a right wing nationalist named Licio Gelli. Also called P-2 or Propaganda 2, and made up of Freemasons, people who throughout the centuries took part in revolutions against existing governments, P-2 was one of the most secretive organizations in Italy.

Licio Gelli and his P-2 members saw the state as the enemy and wanted by force to overthrow Italy's constitutional system and form a presidential dictatorship. Among the secret partners of the P-2 were high ranking Italian military men, judges and financial leaders. Gelli also recruited members of Italy's secret service, the Service of Defense Information.

Thus Michele Sindona and his Vatican connection now became a member of the most important clandestine political groups in Italy.

Using the vast wealth that was available to P-2, Sindona forged yet another secret empire. By 1974 he had bought 6 banks in 4 countries including the United States, took hold of Ciga, the biggest hotel chain in Italy and a lumber and real estate company.

In the summer of 1964, Sindona enlarged his financial power by establishing an international money brokerage company called Moneyrex.

Moneyrex gave Sindona the vehicle to squirrel away millions of dollars into his own account while doing legitimate business. Moneyrex's purpose was to act as a clearinghouse and undercover agency. For a fee of 1/32 of 1 percent, Moneyrex would locate a bank that had excess deposits of a currency and would discover a bank that needed the cash and make payment to the former for a flat fee.

At first Moneyrex got off to a shaky start but soon Sindona had 850 client banks using his services and had a deposit figure of over 660 billion lire.

Using Moneyrex as a cover, Sindona transferred millions of lire out of Italy and placed them in secret Swiss accounts.

But as he served the P-2 and the Mafia Sindona also took the profits from drug smuggling, kidnappings and extortion and placed them into his accounts. Whether planned or not, Sindona became a conspirator of the first magnitude.

While membership in the P-2 brought Sindona in contact with Italy's elite it also acquainted him in the most intimate fashion with members of the American mafia.

The leading mafia families in the United States led by the Genovese and Galante crime clans, had been watching Sindona financial career with much interest. They needed a powerful financier who'd be able to manage their money just like the Pope did.

On November 2, 1957, Michele Sindona met with the top men of the mafia on Palermo, Sicily. At that meeting Sindona was picked to direct the mafia's scheme to burrow into legitimate business across the globe. They also entrusted Sindona with all the profits from their lucrative heroin smuggling.

Now, Sindona was working for two employers, one totally opposed to the belief of the other.

With his reputation in the international financial markets established, Sindona turned his attention firmly to the United States.

He brought his family to New York and began to look for new properties. After a considerable search he found the one institution that would fit his needs: The Franklin National Bank of New York.

Franklin National under its chairman Arthur Roth, had gone through severe financial difficulties including the writing of bad loans and the withdrawal of millions of dollars from Franklin in 1962. Further, Roth wanted to expand Franklin into New York City. His fight to be the first Long Island bank to move into the city was greeted by the banking establishment with less than enthusiasm.

With his losses mounting and Roth's refusal to merge, he sought outside help in seeking a cure for his ailing bank. Michele Sindona saw his opportunity and using funds from his Vatican and illegal investments, made a takeover bid for Franklin National.

Through an intricate series of illegal bank transactions Sindona used his P-2's banking institutions in Italy to raise the millions needed to purchase Franklin. Money belonging to the Sindona group were washed between six banks in Europe to appear as loans to Sindona in case of further auditing.

Once in control over Franklin, Sindona began the process that would eventually lead to his collapse.

He illegally transferred thirty million dollars to Swiss and Italian banks from Franklin's accounts in one month alone. Immediately after his purchase of Franklin, the bank's stock began slipping on the international market.

The opening of Franklin offices in Europe and their bad management began the slide in Franklin's fortunes.

On instructions from Sindona, Peter Shaddik, the man in charge of Franklin's foreign exchange business, expanded overseas trading from 11 million to $3.3 billion by May, 1974. Through bad investments and a conspiracy by Carlo Bordoni, an expert in foreign exchange and a man employed by Sindona, Bordoni and his wife Virginia stole $45 million from their boss.

With Franklin's foreign exchange deposits falling by the day, with international bankers taking their money out of Franklin, Sindona's empire began to crumble.

On May 10, 1974, the Securities and Exchange Commission demanded that Franklin make public their current financial statement. That same day Franklin stock was suspended from being traded.

By October, 1974, after Franklin borrowed $1.7 billion from the Federal Reserve Bank, Franklin National became insolvent and was taken over by European American Bank.

One week later Banca Privata Italiana, Finbank, Bankhaus Wolff of Germany and Amincor Bank, all controlled by Sindona failed.

Later that month the Italian government issued two arrest warrants for Michele Sindona for bank fraud and breaking Italy's financial laws.

Depressed and unable to accept the fact that "empire Sindona's" had been destroyed, Sindona and his mistress Laura Turner fled to Jamaica. From Jamaica Turner took secret financial records to Argentina where the P-2's Licio Gelli had fled. Feeling the heat, Sindona flew to Hong Kong but he was forced to layover in Thailand due to a typhoon.

But Sindona, ever the optimist, decided to go back to the United States and take his chances.

He moved into the Hotel Pierre in New York and began a lucrative lecture tour of American colleges. But on March 9, 1979, Sindona was indicted on 29 counts of perjury, fraud and misappropriation of bank funds.

September 1, 1979 was the day Michele Sindona was to go on trial. But on August 2, after a hurried phone call, Sindona left his room at the Hotel Pierre and vanished from sight.

Wearing a disguise and aided by the mafia, Sindona fled to Vienna enroute in Italy.

The the United States the F.B.I. got a call saying that Sindona had been kidnapped.

By August 16 Sindona and his kidnappers arrived in Palermo. But then his false kidnappers became real ones. Sindona was treated like a prisoner, not able to get enough rest or food. He was interrogated by people wearing masks for the next few weeks demanding to know about his world-wide connections.

And then just as unexpectedly he was taken out of Italy to Salzburg, Munich, Frankfurt and just as mysteriously, back to New York.

In October, 1979, Sindona surrendered to U.S. authorities and relayed his mafia instructed story about his false kidnapping. At the end of his hearing he was hallucinating.

On March 27, 1980, Michele Sindona was convicted of 68 counts of perjury and mishandling of bank funds. He is serving a 27½ year sentence at the Federal Correctional Center in Otisville, N.Y.

The man many people called "the Pope's Banker," the sole person responsible for handling the vast resources of the Vatican almost brought down the fall of the man who resides at St. Peter's.

It is the ultimate irony that a man of the cloth will have to remedy the greed of even their most trusted servants.

Was Orwell Right?

by John Bennett

Who controls the past controls the future. Who controls the present controls the past — O'Brien in 1984

Every government is run by liars and nothing they say should be believed. — I.F. Stone

Many of the predictions made by George Orwell in his book 1984 in relation to big brother surveillance, corruption of language and control of history, have already come about to some extent in Western Countries. The powers of security police to intercept mail and tap phones have been extended, police agencies keep numerous files on law abiding citizens and more and more public officials have the right to enter private homes without a warrant. Many government departments keep computerized information on citizens, and there is a danger that this information will be fed into a centralized data bank.

Attempts by law enforcement agencies to obtain more information through phone tapping, Crimes Commissions, exchange of computerized information, and surveillance cameras, are often understandable, but the cumulative effect of such big brother activities is to make the Western Countries increasingly totalitarian societies. The corruption of language described in 1984 is widespread in the media today with "Newspeak" terms such as democratic, socialist, fascist, war criminal, freedom fighter, racist and many other expressions being used in a deliberately deceptive propagandistic way to whip up mass hysteria or simply to ensure that people can never achieve an approximation of the truth.

CONTROL OF THE PAST

The fact that almost all media comment, book reviews, and feature articles about the book 1984 ignore the central role of controlling the past, indicates that Orwell's prophecy has already become partly fulfilled. The central theme of his book, the control of history, has already been largely written out of references to his book and has gone down the memory hole. The book's hero Winston Smith works in the "Ministry of Truth" rewriting and falsifying history. The Ministry of Truth writes people out of history - they go "down the memory hole" as though they never existed. The Ministry also creates people as historical figures who never existed. "Big Brother," who controls the State of Oceania, uses "thought police" to ensure that people in the inner and outer Party are kept under control. The "thought police" hunt down people who commit the offense of "crime think" - having dangerous ideas. Smith commences to keep a diary, and the first entry in the diary is "Down with Big Brother."

Oceania is at perpetual war with either Eurasia or Eastasia. Alliances between these three states change without rational explanation. "Hate weeks" are organized against Goldstein, the leader of the "opposition" to Big Brother and hate sessions are organized against either Eurasia or Eastasia. O'Brien, a member of the inner Party pretends to Smith that he is part of the Goldstein conspiracy against Big Brother. He asks Smith what he would most like to drink a toast to. Smith chooses to drink a toast, not to the death of Big Brother or to the confusion of the thought police, but "to the past." Both Smith and O'Brien, the main characters in 1984 agree that the past is "more important."

Orwell wrote that "indifference to objective truth is encouraged by the sealing off of one part of the world from another, which makes it harder and harder to discover what is actually happening. There can often be doubt about the most enormous events...The calamities that are constantly being reported - battles, massacres, famines, revolutions - tend to inspire in the average person a feeling of unreality. One has no way of verifying the facts, one is not even fully certain that they have happened, and one is always presented with totally different interpretations from different sources. Probably the truth is discoverable, but the facts will be so dishonestly set forth in almost any newspaper that the ordinary reader can be forgiven either for swallowing lies or for failing to form an opinion." In view of his experiences in the Spanish Civil War when he found that media reports of the war bore no relation to what was happening, Orwell had developed a great skepticism about the ability of even a well intentioned and honest writer to get to the truth. He was generally skeptical of atrocity stories. It should be noted that Orwell worked for the BBC for a time, and the Ministry of Truth is modelled to some extent on the BBC. Orwell noted that the BBC put out false hate propaganda during WWII and controlled "history" by censoring news about the genocidal policy of levelling German cities by saturation bombing.

People's perception of "history" depends on brainwashing by the media, indoctrination by the educational system, peer group pressure, self censorship, and TV docudramas. Docudramas such as Winds of War, Tora, Tora, Tora, Gandhi Gallipoli and Holocaust, which pervade people's "1984" telescreens are a blend of fiction and fact. They give a clear and believable, but usually completely misleading view, of historical events. Docudramas as a device to indoctrinate and mislead people are not new. Shakespeare's docudramas such as Richard III served a similar purpose. The widespread availability of television and the ability of more people to read, makes them more susceptible to being brainwashed by big brother agencies than in the past. The twentieth century is the century of propaganda. Due to different propaganda systems, people in different countries such as Russia, China, and the USA will have quite different beliefs about "history." However, the "Winston Smiths" in communist countries who query "history" are likely to be much more harshly treated than their counterparts in the West. Finally, to make a fairly trite but important point - if the conditions described in 1984 existed in the Western Countries I would not be able to publicly attack security agencies or to query "history." The USA is still one of the freest countries in the world and freedom of speech is still highly valued.

---

The fact that almost all media comment, book reviews, and feature articles about the book 1984 ignore the central role of controlling the past, indicates that Orwell's prophecy has already become partly fulfilled. The central theme of his book, the control of history, has already been largely written out of references to his book and has gone down the memory hole.

---

PERPETUAL WAR FOR PERPETUAL PEACE

The changing alliances between Oceania, Eurasia, and Eastasia described in 1984 are similar to the changing alliances between China, Russia, and the US. It would commemorate 1984 if China switched alliances again. The state of perpetual war described by Orwell is also reflected in the 300 wars since 1945, the 37 armed conflicts under way in 1980, and recent events in Afghanistan, Lebanon, Grenada, Nicaragua, and Central America. Perpetual civil war also seems to prevail in various multi-racial societies. "Doublespeak" propaganda terms are used in these conflicts. "Peace" means war, "peace keeping forces" are used to make war, "rescue operations" mean invasions (i.e., Grenada), "defense strategy" means planning for aggressive wars.

PERPETUAL WAR FOR PERPETUAL PEACE by H. Barnes describes the permanent war economy of the USA, the trickery employed by the USA to enter WWI and WWII, and the censorship of dissident views of "history" by the media, the book trade, libraries, the curricula sections of education departments and book reviews. THE DYNAMICS OF WAR AND REVOLUTION by L. Dennis discusses the need for preparation for perpetual wars to overcome unemployment, boost profits and use up excess capital. Foreign markets are secured through war and foreign aid. Huge loans are made, which cannot be paid back by debtor nations such as Poland and Brazil.

The role of international banks in financing wars and revolutions has been documented in a variety of books, few of which are available in bookshops or libraries in the West. Dr. Antony Sutton in WALL STREET AND THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION has documented the link between International Finance and the Russian Revolution. The American Red Cross Mission to Moscow in 1917 contained more financiers than medical doctors. Wall Street banks helped finance the revolution. This has been almost entirely swept under the rug by historians since it cuts across conventional ideas about the political "left" and "right." Monopoly control through the use of political power was the central aim of both the Communists and the bankers. Dr. Sutton has also documented the flow of finance and technology to Soviet Russia in NATIONAL SUICIDE and WESTERN TECHNOLOGY AND SOVIET DEVELOPMENT 1917 to 1930. Sutton's WALL STREET AND THE RISE OF HITLER establishes the role played by Wall Street banks in financing Hitler's rise to power.

Other books dealing with the financing of wars include THE WAR MONGERS, VODKA COLA and UNCOVERING THE FORCES FOR WAR. THE WAR MONGERS by H. Katz deals with the origins of the two world wars and predicts that the same baking interests responsible for those wars will force America into WWII. VODKA COLA by C. Levinson is an expose of detente in its commercial aspects. Western monopoly capitalism managed by Rockefeller and Hammer do deals with the communist bloc bureaucracy leading to the Vodka-Cola combination. UNCOVERING THE FORCES OF WAR by C. Grieb deals with the role of international financiers in financing both sides in wars.

CONTROL OF THE PAST

Control of the past, the central thesis of Orwell's book, is still quite effective, especially in relation to WWII where the history of the war, to use Napoleon's words, is the "lies agreed upon by the victors." The lies are repeated to justify the carnage of WWII and to explain the Allied policy of unconditional surrender in the war. The six million Holocaust allegation, "the hoax of the twentieth century," is used as a propaganda weapon to promote support for Israel. Uncritical support for Israel by the West especially the USA could contribute to starting WWII. The best way to combat big brother control of the past is for people to ask questions and challenge the propaganda put out by high priests (the O'Briens?) of "history" departments. People should ask whose interests are served by the repetition of particular atrocity stories? What evidence is there to support allegations of mass murder by Idi Amin, Pol Pot, Hitler and Stalin? Are atrocity stories used to whip up hysteria, divert attention from domestic problems, and incite racial hatred? Who controls the media? Are "civil libertarians" in universities in favor of freedom of speech only for those whose views they agree with? Why is the fact that Orwell himself queried the gas chamber allegation not referred to in the

---

The best way to combat big brother control of the past is for people to ask questions and challenge the propaganda put out by high priests (the O'Briens?) of "history" departments... Challenging the official version of anything is a civic responsibility and great fun.

---

media? Who financed the Russian Revolution? Is the USA Federal Reserve Bank controlled by the government of that country? Which corporations benefit from the arms race and to what extent? Why has the USA supplied so much military technology and financial credit to the USSR and other communist countries? Why do wars occur? Challenging the official version of anything is a civic responsibility and great fun.

Citizens should support bona fide civil liberties groups, but should also take action themselves to combat "Big Brother" tendencies. They should challenge accepted versions of "history;" write letters to newspapers, politicians, and government departments about the activities of surveillance agencies; utilize the provisions of Freedom of Information legislation; and actively oppose government measures restricting basic freedoms such as freedom of speech.

---

JOHN BENNETT is an honors graduate in both law and the arts and he's President of the Australian Civil Liberties Union.

The Secret World of Satanism in America

by Gerald Dorset

The baffling phenomenon of Satanism on the rise in the United States gets better documented each day in the daily press. From the pages of The Denver Post, through the Washington Post to the New York Post, reporters seem to agree that "teenagers today seem more and more fascinated by and involved with Satanic Cults."

The ritual murder of a Long Island youth this summer brought to light incredible practices 20 miles from the Statue of Liberty. According to law enforcement officials, the incidence of Satanist-related crimes are higher than generally believed, starting with the classic case of California's "Helter-Skelter" murders of the Manson Family, and ending recently with the shocking events at Northport, N.Y. In the latter, a youngster, Richard Kasso, was accused of carrying out the ritual murder of his acquaintance, Gary Lauwers (The NY Post, 7/10/84). According to the report, the 17-year-old Kasso was a founding member of "The Knights of the Black Pentagram," a group of 20 teenagers who took drugs together. Their secret rites consisted of getting high, killing small pets, drinking their blood and dancing exaltingly to rock music. Kasso, has been known to the police from a previous incident, where he was accused of robbing graves with two of his friends. The youth committed suicide in jail soon after his indictment.

Isolated cases of strange Satanism-related murders have appeared in many other parts of the country, notably in Vermont, Massachusetts, North Carolina, Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas. The most celebrated case, perhaps, is that of the notorious mass killer Henry Lee Lucas, who admitted belonging to a satanic cult known as "The Hands of Death." Lucas confessed to the murder of 360 young men, lured over the years to his Texas ranch for sexual intimacy. After killing his duped victims, he would dig a shallow grave at night and bury them in the moonlight. Lucas further admitted that, although his record is unmatched, the cult kills by contract and often performs ritual cremations. Also, crucifixion of animals was done to "call the presence of the Devil." The big, burly, travelling salesman added that "the cult has branches all over the States." Investigators uncovered 100 bodies and admit that Lucas' detailed descriptions of ritual murders has cleared up over 100 other cases around the country which remained unsolved till then. (The Victory Advocate, 4/23/84).

The Denver Post (5/24/84) came up with another startling revelation, a Colorado gentleman, James MacCarthy, wrote in the paper about his experiences as "a Former Warlock of Boulder." Apparently, he made his living as "organizer" of such "Satanic covens" in which potential warlocks and witches were tested, screened and admitted, if found to be made of the right stuff. He claimed that Colorado ranks third in the nation in Satanism and Witchcraft (after New York and California), backing his contention with statistics. These three states still have the largest number of shops catering to the needs of the worshippers of Satan. He and his collaborator, William Wickersham, explain the rise of Satanism and Witchcraft in America today to the "subconscious fear of the nuclear holocaust and the impending doom," to the increase in use of hallucinogenic drugs, to the nerve-racking effects of rock music, to horror movies, to scary "haunted castle" recreational grounds, and to the titillating appeal of the occult. "Bill" Wickersham even accused toy-manufacturers: "Black-art oriented games, like Dungeons and Dragons, also promote that mentality."

It was a time when witchcraft (and by implication satanism) was thought of as innocuous, even mildly amusing. Book, Bell and Candle, Van Druten's delightful comedy about a beautiful Manhattan witch and her zany family was a smash hit on Broadway in the '60's. It was made into an equally successful movie with Kim Novak as the alluring witch, Jimmy Stewart as her baffled beau, and Jack Lemmon and Ernie Kovac in supporting roles. From there - Hollywood is quick to catch a trend - TV producers jumped into making the I Dream of Genie (the Barbara Eden - Larry Hagman series) and the equally popular Bewitched series, starring Elizabeth Montgomery as a very sweet, homey and appealing housewife-witch. Her sophisticated mother and her cute little daughter were also accomplished master of the Black Arts.

But life is never as Hollywood movies portrays it, alas.

"The problem is that Satanism-and-Witchcraft is not a 'fun thing'," wrote Wayne Van Kampen, a Methodist minister and director of pastoral care and layman's education at the Bethesda Community Mental Health Center, "but a disturbing, psychopathic phenomenon accompanying times of ignorance and confusion. It has no socially redeeming value..."

The peculiar thing is that the Catholic Church is somewhat ambivalent about the whole business. The Catholic Tablet states that "Satanism and witchcraft are Atheism incarnate." It is nothing of the sort: Atheism doesn't believe in "mumbo-jumbo" of any kind. Satanism is patterned after God-worshipping, only it is a destructive god (or goddess, like the blood-thirsty Kali, for instance).

Herman Slater, owner of the Magical Chaldean Shop in New York City, boasted to Daily News (6/9/84) that The Satanic Bible has been "selling at a fast clip." He claimed it was a bestseller "and an eye-opener." The "Bible's" author, Anton La Vey, turned out to be the founder of the First Church of Satan in San Francisco. It provides practical advice in devil worship, explains the raison d'être of Satanism as opposed to Christianity and Islam, and the need for like-minded people to organize in groups protected by the First Amendment. Human sacrifice is followed to its early origins in Judaism and other Oriental religions of past millenniums. This same "Bible" was found by the authorities in Kasso's Northport bedroom.

Voltaire once wrote: "As long as ignorance, prejudice and superstition steer people into believing absurdities, they will continue committing atrocities."

---

GERALD DORSET is a freelance writer by vocation, and an instructor at the Manhattan Community College in New York, by avocation. He has published a book on Edgar Allen Poe and a novella, Adventure in Puerto Rico. He is now working on an autobiography of Iliya Rilsky.

MAGIC

Science of the Future?

by Edith Kermit Roosevelt

As religion is filtered out of public schools, the media and everyday relationships between people, the belief in supernatural realities still remain with us. The sense of mystery and awe and a belief in "good" and "evil" as actual "powers" is not easily extinguished.

What has resulted in the secularist society is not the end of a belief in "unseen forces" but rather the repression of traditional religion and an increasing recourse to "black magic" for power-seeking, selfish ends. As we hear about witchcraft covens and strange cults that may seduce and indoctrinate our children [see Gerald Dorset's article on "Satanism in America" in this issue], it becomes suddenly important to have a sophisticated understanding of what "magic," a supposedly discredited and forgotten superstition, is all about.

Whether in Western countries, Asia or Africa, in ancient or modern societies, magic relies on two basic principles: the first is that objects that have been in contact continue to affect each other, even at a distance after contact has been severed. For instance, a witch or sorcerer will perform his rites and spells over a lock of hair or the nail parings from the object of his intention.

The second magical principle, which involves "imitative magic," holds that like produces like. This it makes use of representations of the objects or persons that are to be affected.

The use of wax, clay or lead dolls to kill or injure the person that the doll represents is well known in all cultures. Records of this practice survive from Egypt, Mesopotamia, India, Greece and Rome. In one recent case which received widespread publicity in the press, a Moroccan financier was reported to have stuck pins into the photographs of his business rivals.

While most modern witches covens claim that they are simply paying homage to "the forces of creation," such as the horned god and mother goddess revered in ancient times as Isis and Osiris, there is no question but the dark side of the occult sometimes ensnares the fervent practitioner.

How can we explain the effect of these practices and the persistence of traditional witchcraft customs throughout the ages?

Basic to understanding this unbroken tradition is a view of human beings as sharing a common environment in that they are submerged in the electro-magnetic energy field of the earth. Furthermore, each life form, including human beings, has its own electro-magnetic field which if sufficiently distorted will ultimately result in harm to the person whether in the form of disease or psychic trauma. (see EMF in this issue) This concept basic to "faith healing" or psionic medicine opens the way to a scientific understanding of the way it may be possible for one individual to affect another, whether for good or evil purposes, over a distance.

Relevant to this is evidence from the Soviet Union that there exists a mysterious form of biocommunication between living tissue. A paper by Soviet trained Parapsychologist and Engineer Larissa-Vilenskaya who is now with the San Francisco based Washington Research Center, reports that scientists from the Novosibirsk Medical Institute and the Siberian Branch of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR have shown that living cells communicate with each other by electromagnetic signals. The following experiments were performed by V.P. Kaznachev and his colleagues regarding the paranormal transmission of death:

Briefly, two groups of cells were selected from the same plant cultures grown under sterile conditions. The two cultures in quartz containers were placed on each side of a window joining two environmentally shielded rooms.

"When the living cells in one chamber were infected by viruses, or by strong chemicals, the cells in the other isolated chamber underwent pathological conditions and died," Ms. Vilenskaya reports.

The transmission of sickness and death induced in the second culture only occurred when the window was made of quartz rather than ordinary glass.

The major transmission difference between window glass and quartz which both transmit visible light is that quartz unlike glass transmits both ultraviolet and infrared well. Lt Col. Tom Bearden (ret.), a nuclear engineer and weapons analyst who contributed to Defense Intelligence Agency reports on Soviet progress in parapsychology, has explained these sets of experiments in terms of what he calls "death transmission via the paranormal channel" in terms of a "sympathetic" interaction. In his book The Excalibur Briefing Bearden says:

Specifically, every cell emits mitogenetic radiation in the ultraviolet twice: when it is born and when it dies. The UV photon emitted at death contains the exact virtual state pattern of the condition of the cell at death. The healthy cells are bombarded with death messages from those that are dying, and this diffuses the death pattern throughout the healthy culture, eventually kindling into the same death pattern there.

The other principle of "magic" that concerns us—so called "imitative magic" need not strain our credulity if we view the doll or some other symbol of the person represented as simply a focusing device that helps one person to communicate with or influence another person telepathically. In ancient times many devices were used to boost the power of thought forms including the crystal ball, the dowsing rod, the string-and-weight psychic pendulum, etc. In the last century it was discovered that electrical devices could be used as tuning assistants leading to clinical radionics which is practiced in England and elsewhere.

The late Abbe Mermet, the French country priest who used photographs of patients to diagnose their conditions, explained these "cases of distant diagnosis without any material contact" as follows:

The photograph of the person was useful, the priest said, because "the human mind, lost in a labyrinth of facts needs for its guidance an Ariadne's thread."

New age scientists are seeking to discover the nature of this "Ariadne's thread." For example, members of the American Association of Meta-Science have performed a series of experiments in "kindling though" or psychic energy into electromagnetic energy, and photographed the resulting light energy on film with an AN SX-70 camera. In discussing some of these photos reproduced in his book, Bearden says that poloroid film is used because it is sensitive to some infrared and ultraviolet frequencies "so that bioenergy kindling into electromagnetic energy at IR or UV frequency can be photographed even though not seen by the naked eye."

But "New Age Science" is not an unmixed blessing. As the study and acceptance of psychic energies comes into vogue, all sorts of cults are springing up which exploit meditation, biofeedback, altered states of consciousness, etc. These techniques are—as they have always been—subject to exploitation by "witches" as well as the intelligence services of hostile governments.

In this framework, expressed in modern terms, magic can be likened to unscrupulous and often unskilled practitioners of mind control technology. As we learn more about our life field energies [see "EMF: The Mind Fields" in this issue] and how they interact with universal energies, a body of laws and codes of professional ethics will certainly need to be developed to ensure that we use these forces as nature's co-creators rather than her destroyers.

---

EDITH KERMIT ROOSEVELT is a freelance journalist who writes on genetic engineering, ELF waves, Radionics, microwave technology, mind control, the "new age" ideologies, among others. She is a regular contributor to Critique.

Power Psychics Control the World

by Richard Clark, Ph.D.

There are two basic systems available for the development of psychic powers—the soft, or passive and the hard, or power methods. The soft system utilizes sensory deprivation and suppresses the life force. The techniques employed are the various forms of hypnosis. Psychic abilities of the passive kind can be developed under this system—distant viewing, telepathy, etc. That is, the subject can receive information but cannot actively affect the minds or lives of others or have power over external events. The soft system has been developed by the Vienna Circle and in various other programs both in the U.S. and abroad. The abilities which can be developed are less powerful and less reliable than those of the hard system and are inadequate for military or intelligence gathering purposes. The one advantage of the soft system is that it is cheap to practice and available to anyone. Since there is a good deal of literature on the subject, we will be concerned here with the hard system, which is known to very few people other than those who actually practice it.

As opposed to the sensory deprivation (psychic pain) methods, the power system utilizes sensory overload by stimulating the life force through highly pleasurable sexual activity. Its aim is to create in the subject external power to control people and events. The degree to which the powers can be developed depends on the gene code of the subject. Some are unable to reach the level of intensity required, or if they can they reach satiety and are unable to sustain it. Those with the correct gene code have a compulsion to perform certain types of sexual acts and bear distinctive birth marks. Since the gene codes are rare, there are very few who are able to utilize these systems. The training requires a great deal of money for secluded residences, co-participants, a supply of victims, opulent wardrobes, props, and protection from the law. For this reason, the system can only be developed by or with the sponsorship of the rich and powerful.

The active system is polarized into the dominant-male homosexual (death/destroyer) system and the submissive-female lesbian (life/builder) systems. They are the two extreme manifestations of the life force, or the "dark and light sides of the force." Heterosexuality produces babies, not psychic power.

The male method is the development of the projection/emitter forms of the manipulation of the life force. Essentially the training consists of sexually abusing unwilling boys (representing war, the subjugation of other males), torturing, mutilating and killing fertile women, preferably pregnant (the power of destruction over creation) and consuming the flesh and blood of the victim (death is the devourer of life). Frequently the women are burned, fire being the destructive of the four elements. Also burned or otherwise destroyed are works of art, antique furniture, clothing, etc., always very expensive and of the finest craftsmanship, representing the destruction of civilization. The excitement generated by participation causes the life force to increase and concentrate so that it can be projected outward. These projections include the "evil eye" (psychic killing) and power telepathy.

Satanism, Voodoo, and other forms of ritual human and animal sacrifice are weak versions of this system and produce varying minor results similar to those of the soft system. They also employ hypnosis, with chanting and monotonous music. All compulsive murderers experience an altered state of consciousness and extreme pleasure in killing. The power psychic system develops it into a science.

The female system, the inverse of the male system, is the development of the suction/absorption forms of the manipulation of the life force. The same powers are developed by a different method. All males are excluded with the exception of the subject, a male transvestite who is sexually a submissive lesbian—far more submissive than the lesbian submissives who attend him or the submissive male homosexuals. The group is ruled by a female who sexually dominates the transvestite and the others. The acts symbolize the subordination of the male destructive force to the female creative force, necessary for the building and maintaining of civilization. The clothing and jewelry worn by all as well as the surroundings are extremely opulent. The excitement generated by participation causes the life force to act as a suction. In the killing method the life is literally sucked out of the victim, leaving the corpse drawn up in the fetal position.

Shamanism is a weak version of the female power system as is the method used among tribes in the Phillipines to develop psychic surgeons. Another manifestation of the female system is the chivalric code, which requires that soldiers (destroyer males) be not indiscriminate butchers but defenders of life. In the middle ages the knight derived courage from the adoration of his lady who set him tasks and rewarded him for his services.

In both systems the subject progresses from initiate through various levels of the adept according to his innate ability. While the powers of the male system adepts are far less powerful than those of the female system adepts, the gene code of the former is more common, so their advantage is in numbers. Also, being aggressive in nature, they take a greater interest in using their powers. Female system adepts can perform advanced healing, the best even being able to regenerate limbs. Male system psychics are destructive only and cannot heal but can induce disease. Female system adepts are builders and will only destroy destroyers. Male system adepts will destroy anyone, even their own kind. The greatest advantage of the female system is that it is able to produce a master, whose powers exceed those of all other psychics combined. While other power psychics can, by power hypnosis, cause one to think that he is seeing nonexistent objects, a master can manipulate the universe's information with his mind, actually creating material objects out of seemingly nothing. He can "raise the dead" by recreating the deceased individual. Unfortunately the gene code for a master is so rare as to be almost nonexistent. The only master in recorded history was Joshua, or Jesus, of Nazareth. The human gene pool has greatly degenerated over the last several thousand years, so it is assumed that there were numerous masters in the most ancient times. The male system resulted from the degeneracy.

The power psychic systems were passed down from antiquity through small groups who jealously guarded the knowledge. Schools to develop the powers existed in Egypt—the Priests of Ra and the Priestesses of Isis. However, the principle of least effort caused the systems to degenerate. The psychics became lazy and bored with exercising their power and relied more and more on the brute force of armies to maintain control. In addition, psychics were compulsively emotional and never developed their intellects, so that they were unable to use their powers rationally. The psychics of the female system were dependent on the will of dominant women who were subject to a variety of influences. Joshua squandered his awesome powers performing parlor tricks and preaching his mistress's foolish and dangerous notions of religion. He ended his life vegetating in what is now Mexico. One thing that even a master cannot do is interfere with the cycles. The death cycle must be completed.

During periods of war and anarchy the power psychic knowledge was divided into segments and stored in different locations. Eventually the schools died out and the knowledge was lost. But another ancient Aryan system was discovered by the Greeks—that of boosting the intelligence far beyond its normal range. They learned this, as well as the female psychic system from the Egyptians and created the Eleusinian mystery school but being rationally oriented and lacking the gene code it eventually became a sort of mystical religion (later picked up by the Romans) rather than a school for psychics.

At about this time, a mysterious and malevolently brilliant people began to make their imprint on history. Groups of gypsies who had given up nomadism for a relatively sedentary life and intermarried with local populations, settled in various parts of the world and achieved great political influence through the use of occult arts accumulated during their travels. These sociopathic peoples were able to dominate and then destroy every nation in which they lived. They understood the two basic forces of the universe and called themselves ISis-RA-EL, the female and male forces of the Creator, or Israel, later "Jews". In Rome, where they both created and destroyed the empire, they invented a history, a religion, and a holy book for themselves, the book being a collection of the myths and bits of history that they had picked up around the world. As their religion was exclusive and militant, they created a complementary religion, universal and submissive, based on the teaching of Joshua, for their enemies the gorgios (in gypsy) or goyim. The plan was that everyone would be either with them or not against them. The one thing they needed for world domination was the knowledge of the power psychic systems which they had heard about. One of the many reasons for the crusades was to acquire the lost knowledge. Their Knights Templar were successful in collecting the fragments. The Jews then abducted those with the desired birthmarks and bred them into the elite Jewish families. One of the purposes of the inquisitions of the Roman Catholic church was to provide a training program for producing power psychics within the Dominican (the name is significant) order. They were able to develop the male system to the maximum extent but had no success with the female system due to the transvestites' lack of cooperation. At the same time the Jews developed the intelligence boosting system so that they could use their powers rationally. By the 16th century they were well on their way to complete control of their more numerous enemies.

They established headquarters in Switzerland and created subsidiaries in various countries—a myriad of secret and supportive societies. These groups, the Club of Rome, the Bilderbergers, Freemasons, etc., are well publicized—not to inform the masses, who don't believe in conspiracies or if they do, can't do anything about them, but to allow those who are part of the power hierarchy to be aware of the structure and of their place within it. It is not important to the outsider to know the specific functions of the Hydra's many heads. What is important is that they are controlled by homosexuals and are all subservient to the power psychics—the Tyrannosaurus Rex and his court. Total centralization and a rigid hierarchical power structure is essential in a destroyer system since there is no instinct for group survival, only individual survival. A system designed to create anarchy must prevent anarchy within its own ranks at all costs. The power network encompasses the entire world. We have had a one world government for centuries though the illusion of national sovereignty was maintained as long as possible.

The power psychics are only extreme versions of the nonpsychic types of men who assume leadership in human affairs. Deviation from the heterosexual norm is the rule rather than the exception among the most influential people of all ages. Male transvestites have higher I.Q.s than people of any other sexual orientation. They are highly rational and are prominent in the sciences and the upper levels of the military (Napoleon, Rommel). Bisexuals also provide military leadership (Julius Caesar, Alexander). Submissive homosexuals are prominent in the arts. Men of genius are different from other men in many different ways and that includes their sexuality. However, in a healthy state the majority of the people, including those in all positions of authority and influence must be heterosexual, for it is only they who, due to their feelings for wives, children and grandchildren, have a vested interest in the future of the state.

While lesbians have little impact on society, male homosexuals are the greatest scourge ever visited upon mankind, not excepting the bubonic plague. They are not, as their propaganda would have it, just like everyone else except for their taste in sex partners. Sexual orientation is one of the most important influences in the development of an individual's world view. The homosexual's psychological makeup is entirely different from that of others. Dominant male homosexuals are essentially psychopaths who hate women, children, animals, plants—the entire life process. Unlike other predators in nature, their victims are not the deformed and unfit but the healthiest and most beautiful. From their ranks come history's mass murderers, from Stalin to the serial murderer on the street. In addition, they are known for their remarkable cowardice. While they love war and delight in sending the flower of heterosexual males to their deaths on the battlefield, they themselves always manage to secure positions of safety, frequently as "interrogators." In their relations with those more powerful than themselves they are fawning and servile. Since they fear the one thing that can destroy them, a militant defense of life, they disarm potential enemies by promoting pacifism, the handmaiden of the destructive forces.

While the submissive homosexuals lack the dominants' extreme hatred for the life process, they are indifferent to it and are supportive of the dominant male power structure. Just as dominants have none of the positive male traits but only the negative ones, the submissives have none of the positive female traits, only the negative ones. Peevish, petty and catty, having no regard for women, family or nation, they are common among informers and traitors, eager to do the bidding of their masters. A good example would be Winston Churchill, who ordered the bombing of Dresden, a city of no military significance but rich with art treasures and occupied mostly by women and children, over 100,000 of whom were incinerated by British airmen assisted by Americans, all of who were only following orders. Compare this event, humorously referred to by its planners as "torching the Dresden doll", with the male power psychic training sessions already described.

When homosexuals get a foothold in any organization they immediately begin to group up and organize themselves. Eventually they squeeze heterosexual males and women out of whatever fields they choose to take over. After they have gained control of all the major institutions of a society its disintegration follows rapidly. In all of the analyses of the causes of the deaths of civilizations, homosexuals have received little attention, usually being classified in the general category of "decline of morality". Actually when homosexuals become powerful they promote the dissolution of heterosexual sexual morality, then in an atmosphere of anything goes, make their bid for public approval. Psychiatry, the pseudo-science created by Rex, reveals little or nothing about the psychopathology of the homosexual. A very large percentage of psychiatrists are themselves homosexual and are part of the Jewish/homosexual power structure.

Every leadership promotes and prospers those of their own kind in the society at large ("As above, so below"). In the current death cycle homosexuality is rewarded and therefore rampant. In the world today, at least 75 percent and probably close to 90 percent of all position of any influence whatever in the military, government, media, religion, entertainment, higher education, arts, and business are occupied by homosexuals. Most, particularly at the higher levels, are required for appearances to marry and produce children. Loyalty is secured by threats (the homosexuals are secretly taped and/or filmed in their sexual activities for possible exposure) and rewards. Occasionally one who is out of favor is exposed making him seem an anomaly rather than representative of the system. In addition to the monetary rewards the sexual rewards are liberal but decline going down the hierarchy. At the top is the complete Roman circus—blood, boys, and song. At the middle level there are snuff films and the sex partners are choice, though willing and often rented rather than unwilling. It is unknown how many women and children classified as missing or runaways are abducted for the most brutal events, never to appear again. The rewards actually increase at the bottom, outlaw level, outside the official hierarchy. Homosexual rapists and street murderers, inflamed by homosexual produced splatter films and misogynous pornography are prospered by judges and attorney who are also part of the system. Such is homocracy, into which every patriarchy eventually degenerates.

A long cycle is difficult to perceive because the rise and fall are gradual with many peaks and valleys, but it is easy to see the growth and death of a power tenure like an empire or a single regime. When a new cycle, in the present case a death cycle begins, it is carried forward effortlessly by the energy of its new power. After it reaches its apex, having overcome all obstacles and solidified its power, it must go into the maintenance mode. Since there are no enemies, it must create them, as Rex created National Socialist Germany. When action ceases, decay sets in. But monstrous bureaucracies are established which are so cumbersome and inefficient that even the smallest action is doomed to failure. Since major action would shock the system into self-destruction, all efforts are concerned with maintaining a state of inaction. Actions which should be taken to repair the system are discarded or postponed indefinitely. The system, unable to eliminate its waste products, is now in a state of advanced decay. Everyone is aware of this and hopes that the system will last ten more years or for his lifetime. The system now declines precipitously, all discipline breaks down, and, in a destroyer system, the destroyers fall upon one another in a feeding frenzy. If it is not yet time for a builder cycle this can be hygienic. Since the higher elements of the population have been wiped out in numerous wars leaving the predators to proliferate, there is an unhealthy ratio of predators to prey so a drastic reduction of the predator population will buy time for the system. If the time has come for the end, however, the builders will come forth and a life cycle will begin.

The Tyrannosaurus Rex has, like his power psychic predecessors, abandoned himself to pleasure and delegated the duties for which he was bred to think tanks and an international police. When one is trained from childhood in total self-indulgence it is difficult to take duty seriously. As is usually the case with the powerful, he is totally isolated from reality. It is unlikely that he ever reflects upon his namesake, the great beast who ruled the world for awhile and was wiped from it in a moment. If draconian measures are not taken, his empire will slide into the abyss. There are unmistakable signs that he has at last set in motion the means by which to reduce the predator population drastically. Also, since his psychotronic policing system has proved inadequate he has authorized the Soviets to develop the male power psychic system. This is a desperate and dangerous measure that will lead to escalation. He may then have no choice but to develop the female system adepts, the standard bearers of the nascent life cycle. If all fails and there is no way to avoid the abyss he may choose to unleash the ultimate weapons and in one last orgiastic convulsion, destroy both the earth and himself, in which case the earth's cycles could stop entirely.

There is good evidence that three cycles are closing at the present time—the great death cycle which began at the time of the end of the Aryan empire about ten thousand years ago, the Jewish era since about 500 years ago, and the Zionist (Capitalist)-Communist empire which dates from World War I.

One would like to say that love is more powerful than hate but in fact, the two systems are coequal, have always coexisted, and are mutually dependent. One is creative, the other destructive, and they cycle like day and night. The Universe knows nothing of good or evil and cares only that its systems are balanced.

BOOK REVIEWS

Architects of Fear: Conspiracy Theories and Paranoia in American Politics
by George Johnson (Tarcher Publishers; Los Angeles, CA; $14.95; 1984)

Unfortunately, the prejudiced title of this book, Architects of Fear, will prevent many conspiracy theorists from reading this excellent survey of America's conspiracy underground. In spite of the author's admitted "pluralist" bias, he has outlined, perhaps as objectively as any fundamental opponent can do so, the major conspiracy theories being purveyed in America by "rightwing" sources. (Only brief mention is made of the equally pervasive "leftwing" theories.) I recommend Johnson's book without reservation to conspiracy theorists of both left and right who seek to perfect or conceive their own theories through a study of the theories of others. New knowledge and insights will be gained by even the most "advanced" conspiracy theorists.

Missing in Johnson's work is a truly critical analysis of the evidence for the various conspiracy theories presented. Typically, facts casting doubt on the author's pluralistic assumptions are brushed aside without serious basic research or historical investigation. Johnson apparently feels that interpretation of historical facts is essentially arbitrary and can be used to support either pluralistic or non-pluralistic paradigms. Thus, the book does not encourage the pluralist to question his assumptions. The typical reader is encouraged to perceive conspiracy theorists as crack-pots not worthy of further investigation.

In spite of explicit denials, the author paradoxically presents a conspiracy theory of conspiracy theories, that is, that conspiracy theories are promulgated either by fast buck artists shearing their flocks or by established power groups attempting to create the external enemy required to frighten their members into submission and self-sacrifice. In other words, Johnson implies that all conspiracy theories are "war propaganda" designed by "architects of fear" to first frighten and then rally "the troops" to loyalty and action.

Johnson points out that LaRouche goes even further than this in broadening the definition of conspiracy (perhaps too far). LaRouche often includes as "conspirators" those who are sincerely influenced, overtly or covertly, by the elite's ideas, the ideas being consciously or unconsciously designed to ensnare dupes for the elite's policy directions. Thus, your local independent environmental group is seen as part of the international "Dark Ages" plot against technical progress by way of shared ideas alone even when there is no centralized command or financial aid. [Note: A similar situation arises when President Reagan accuses the nuclear freeze movement of being part of a Soviet directed conspiracy. The FBI replies that Soviet financing and direct control of "freezers" is minimal. This does not prove that Soviet propaganda or Soviet "idea power" in the West did not make the freeze movement what it is today.]

Another interesting feature of Johnson's book is the theme of his concluding chapter: "Seeing the Light" in which he unabashedly endorses the Gnostic/Illuminati principle of "illumination" from within as opposed to orthodoxy "revealed" by external authority. Thus, Johnson continues to see conspiracy theory exclusively as a cynical conspiracy used to prevent the faithful from questioning their orthodoxy and simultaneously used to rally the faithful to fight competing orthodoxies as well as the forces of free inquiry and free choice.

Unfortunately, Johnson has so far failed to notice that conspiracy theorists exist among the forces of free inquiry and free choice who favor a pluralist society but believe a pluralist society has been so far achieved in appearance only. These are what might be called libertarian conspiracy theorists. I believe that the best of these theorists posit that the various competing interest groups, business, labor, third world, etc., are balanced against each other and covertly organized by the overwhelming money power of the Anglo-American Establishment into a centralized policy setting capability. This power structure must be exposed and swept away before true pluralism can be realized.

Besides recognizing the objective obstacle to freedom, such conspiracy theorists organize and channel the energies of the exploited against the oligarchical enemies of pluralism by way of their conspiracy theories. People, such as Johnson, who believe that pluralism already has been achieved, only serve to continue the myth that human problems are caused by the anarchistic interaction of free people, instead of the power plays and exploitive policies of the conspiring ruling classes.

Peter E. McAlpine is the former editor of Conspiracy Digest

Cline, Marjorie W., Carla E. Christiansen and Judith M. Fontaine, eds. SCHOLARS GUIDE TO INTELLIGENCE LITERATURE: Bibliography of the Russell J. Bowen Collection. Frederick, MD. University Publications of America, Inc. 1983. 236 pp.

This remarkable bibliography, containing over five thousand entries, was published for the National Intelligence Study Center, 1015 18th St., NW, Suite 805, Washington DC 20036. As far as I know, it's the most complete and comprehensive bibliography available in its subject area. There are books listed here I had absolutely no idea existed and I've been an intelligence buff for over twenty years. Unfortunately, there are no annotation — a major weakness. Basically, it's nothing more than a list of books albeit a remarkably large one.

In carefully going through it I have noticed some significant omissions. Left out are such classics as Arthur Ponsonby's FALSEHOOD IN WARTIME, an expose of World War I atrocity propaganda, and all of a hundred or so revisionist works that should have been included such as Arthur Butz's HOAX OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

The book is arranged in sections under headings and subheadings. The first part contains entries on national intelligence establishments, collection of information, research and analysis, counterintelligence, covert action, subversion, intelligence support, legal and moral considerations and criticisms and exposes.

Part two, devoted to intelligence related topics, includes anti-Communist and other extremist movements, assassinations, censorship, escape and evasion, foreign relations, law enforcement, political dissent, psychological warfare, unconventional warfare, warfare, wars and weapons.

Russel J. Bowen, who accumulated the massive collection of intelligence literature cataloged here, which is now deposited in Georgetown University, is a retired Colonel in the U.S. Army.

Perhaps overpriced at $45.00, this is the kind of book a serious student of this field must have. Information on it and many related titles, as well as an excellent bimonthly newsletter, Foreign Intelligence Literary Scene, is available from University Publications of America, 44 N. Market St., Frederick, MD 21701.

Singerman, Robert, ANTISEMITIC PROPAGANDA: An Annotated Bibliography and Research Guide. New York. Garland Publishing, Inc. 1982. 486 pp.

This is a fascinating book. I was first made aware of it by an acquaintance who is, by Singerman's standards, antisemitic. He announced his intent to obtain every title listed in it for his library. His reasoning was that this was obviously a list of book that Jewish organizations will eventually have banned or burned. An interesting point and quite possibly true.

ANTISEMITIC PROPAGANDA is an extensively annotated bibliography, listed in chronological order, of books hostile toward or critical of Jews, Judaism or Zionism. the first listing is Auguste Rohling's seven-page 1871 tract, "The Jew According To The Talmud." 1,437 entries later we come to Ben Klassen's "The White Man's Bible," published in 1981.

Singerman has apparently read every one of these 1,437 books, pamphlets and tracts and is generally insightful in his annotations. He includes several titles which, in my judgment, are not really antisemitic but rather merely critical of Jewish individuals, behaviors or of Zionism, which is not the same as Judaism. If one defines "antisemitism" as the hatred of Jewish people merely for their Jewishness or their ethnicity, then Singerman is wrong on several counts. On the other hand, "antisemitism" and "antisemite" have degenerated into epithets in present-day usage and risk becoming the Jewish equivalent of "nigger" and "kike." The ADL tends to define "antisemitism" as any thought or expression or act which impacts adversely on Jewish interests as the ADL interprets them. Singerman tends to gravitate towards that absurd definition in many instances. The "antisemite" epithet has become a bludgeon to beat Jewish critics with and this book is but one more example.

The Research Guide section of Singerman's bibliography consists of an additional 481 pro-semitic titles or titles providing resource material toward the end of defaming "antisemites." I was impressed to see my 1970 Bibliography On The American Right and my 1979 Directory of the American Right included. My bibliography and directory on the American Left were omitted, however, in spite of the fact that increased attention by Jewish organizations is being devoted to "antisemitism" from the left. After all, "antisemites" are everywhere, just everywhere! I also found an article by my uncle, the late Dr. Walter Wilcox.

In checking the Kansas City, MO public library I did not find a single one of Singerman's "antisemitic" titles in the card catalog. I suspect it's been seen to that neither this nor any other library will contain any of them, either. On the other hand, I suspect that Singerman's ANTISEMITIC PROPAGANDA will be widely distributed as a list of "those" books to "watch out for." In my view, however, for serious students of this phenomenon it's a worthwhile addition to one's library. As my acquaintance previously, it may become a virtual INDEX PROHIBITUM of books you can't find and, consequently, can't read. Overpriced at $60.00 from Garland Publishing, 136 Madison Avenue, New York, NY 10016.

---

LAIRD WILCOX is founder of the WILCOX COLLECTION ON CONTEMPORARY POLITICAL MOVEMENTS, one of the largest accumulations of its kind, in Spencer Research Library at the University of Kansas. [See his ad in this issue.]

The Project published by A-albionic Consulting and Research, 626 Flowerdale, Ferndale, Michigan 48220. $15.00/year.

Reviewed by Lucian Nicholai

The Project is a new conspiracy expose newsletter billed as "an executive summary of an on-going private research network dedicated to evaluating and applying the politico-economic theory of a hegemonic London-centered world money carte." It appears ten times per year for "political activists, investors, and others who can benefit from serious ruling class/conspiracy scholarship."

It is clear that The Project is building on the revelations of Establishment Professor Carroll Quigley's (Tragedy and Hope and Anglo-American Establishment), allegedly from first hand knowledge, regarding the Rhodes/Milner "Round Table" conspiracy behind the Royal Institute of International Affairs and the Council on Foreign Relations. However, The Project vehemently rejects the Right-wing, Bircher slant given Quigley's profound analysis by sensationalists such as Gary Allen (None Dare Call It Conspiracy), Cleon Skousen (Naked Capitalist), and G. Edward Griffin (Capitalist Conspiracy). Summing-up its perspective, The Project masthead proclaims, "The British Empire is the central phenomenon of world history since the fall of Rome." In addition to analyzing and criticizing the Anglophile Quigley, most of whose writings have been ignored by the "Right," The Project is delving into the "lost" literature of the "Anglophobes," particularly E.C. Knuth's Empire of the City: World Super State. Alliance with Britain in WWI and WWII lead most Americans to forget that America was born and grew in bitter, unremitting conflict with Great Britain.

The Project is providing a radical investigation of the mass mind control methods of the British Oligarchy including Secret Societies, Jungian Psychology, and "occult" Dualism. Also, the role of British Empire propaganda in Christian Fundamentalism, Judaism, Secular Humanism, free-enterprise, Masonry, Marxism, and Fascism is being plumbed.

All in all, The Project adds up to must reading for the serious conspiracy researcher. The reader will find an overlap with Lyndon LaRouche only in the "anti-British" theme. Otherwise, there is no similarity in objectives, ideology, attitudes, or methods.

LETTERS

...[T]he remarkable smorgasbord platter of unorthodox notions you've served up, varied as it is, hasn't happened to strike a resonance with my own characteristic obsessions, and thus it seems to me "dispensable."

Some of the questions that haunt my mind:

Metaphysics: What are the implications of the now-acknowledged collapse of Darwin's pseudo-science of evolution? What alternative picture of the history of terrestrial life can be envisaged that won't entail seemingly preposterous implications? I don't mean, of course, that intervention by supernatural designers is an unthinkable hypothesis: what does seem unthinkable is the notion of a more or less "disciplined program" of supernatural creations proceeding, without substantial change of its ground-rules, for a period of several billion years.

Might we, to escape this antinomy, be forced into taking seriously Gosse's old Omphalos hypothesis, according to which the whole fossil record would be regarded as "merely colorful details intended to give artistic verisimilitude," precisely comparable in nature to those "lying stones" once foisted on Dr. Beringer? (Certain egregious specimens, such as Archaeopteryx, Quetzalcoatlus, and Ultrasaurus, disturbingly hint at a possible necessity for such a "lusus-supernaturae" explanation.) The metaphysical abyss that awaits us here is that, if we have to accept that the geological record cannot be taken as solid fact, it is not apparent what aspect of the "real" world is any more trustworthy, and we find that paranoid solipsism has become a rational philosophy.

Conspiracy: The intervention of outside intelligences in our visible world is an ancient unanimous superstition, whose uncompromising rejection by science has borne incredibly dazzling fruits. The fact, or apparent fact, that must after all be accepted, in order to account for the origin of species, is directly corroborated by a vast mass of evidence—but evidence of a profoundly disturbing nature. I need only cite the recent global “UFO” affair. Ninety percent of the evidence proves to be explicable as error or hoax; the wisest course, undoubtedly, is to discard the remainder as well, and think no more of the matter. But, if we are so incautious as to look into it more closely, we will find it virtually proven, a hundred times over, that Earth has been visited by explorers from beyond our solar system, flying vessels driven by forces beyond our ken; their pilots, who have often been seen, are nearly always of some humanoid type, most commonly queer little fellows with huge heads and big eyes. Reflect on that, and savor the irony of it: the evidence is too abundant, and too diverse, to be credible! The UFO-nauts and their craft show resemblances to one another—but not identities. Are we supposed to believe that, in the few years since 1947, several dozen spacefaring civilizations have independently happened upon our planet (and quietly departed again)? If we can’t swallow that—and yet, can’t judge all the witnesses liars—we are forced to a most unsettling conclusion: Somebody Up There is pulling our leg. These unearthly beings and their unearthly machines, who arrive so easily and vanish so tracelessly, must be mere “quasi-real” simulacra, projected not from the unimaginably distant stars, but from somewhere very close at hand yet hidden from us—somewhere “behind the scenery” of Earth itself. It is by no means agreeable to have to accept that “All the world’s a stage” is sober truth, and that behind the scenes there are unknown intelligences with supernatural powers—who use them to deceive us.

Before the “flying saucers” burst upon us, there was the still more prodigious epic of Spiritualism (or Spiritism, as it was called in France, where “Allan Kardec’s” spirits revealed the truth of reincarnation, unanimously declared false by spirits in England.) A vast mass of direct evidence testifies that on countless occasions mediums have given information known only to the dead, and that staggering “physical phenomena”—not all of them fraudulent—were once produced in profusion. The communicating entities, having thus established their bona fides, gave us first-hand accounts of conditions “on the next plane”—so many, and so various, as to constitute a serious obstacle to credibility. Eventually the more spectacular phenomena dwindled and ceased to appear. May we not detect in all this an analogy to more recent phenomena designed to convince us of the reality of extraterrestrial visitors? Someone once said, “The only thing we definitely know about spirits is that they tell lies”—an unsympathetic summation to be sure, but not an indefensible one: the same verdict that we had to reach concerning the UFOs and their unearthly pilots.

This appalling peripeteia is the work of those sanctified agencies, motherhood and the advances of modern medicine; and since fate has not chosen to put in our hands any “humane” means to control population growth, it seems we must pin our hopes for the future on infanticide, cannibalism (the only rational response to global famine), and genocide on the vast possible scale. (“Radiation treatment” by nuclear war cannot be endorsed, which is most unfortunate since it seems quite certain to be given a try: it will almost maximize suffering, and will indiscriminately kill the patient along with the disease.) As things stand now, we must ask whether an anthropocentric ethics still retains any claim to validity. Imagine some superior being coming upon Earth in the 1980's, and discovering how it is being raped, laid waste, and fouled by the pitiless attack of Homo sapiens, who behaves as if dedicated to the purpose of exterminating all life-forms but his own: would not such a being, shocked by the ravages of this malignant organism, wholly extirpate it if that lay within his power? And would he not be ethically justified in doing so? Ought we to profess a cancer-centered ethics, simply because we happen to be cancer cells ourselves?

With thoughts such as these ever gibbering at the back of my mind, can you wonder if I find the crotchets debated in Critique, odd and various as they are, too basically "inconsequential" to seize my attention? To every man his own madness: my own is of too urgent and painful a kind to be effectively distracted by the other varieties that your unique and commendable efforts have gathered together.

A.M.

IF YOUR HEAD'S BURIED IN THE SAND...

Subscribe now and keep posted on what's happening to your money and your rights in your country today!

Annual membership
$25.00

Sample issue—$2.00

Your Tail
Is A Target!

The Order of The Upright Ostrich
P.O. Box 100787; Ft. Lauderdale, FL 33310

Name _____
 Address _____
 City _____
 State _____ Zip _____

PLEASE MAKE CHECKS PAYABLE TO PEGGY POOR

Archaeus Project

---

An educational foundation formed to study current and historical processes for the detection and measurement of bioenergetic fields--electric, magnetic, and psychical. Publications (Artifex and journal ARCHAEUS), monthly speakers, research library, information service.

Artifex appears bimonthly. It contains editorials, notices, discussions of timely issues in the paranormal, listings of library acquisitions, and original articles by noted investigators and theoreticians.

ARCHAEUS, the journal, appears twice a year. Recent volumes have contained articles by

Jules Eisenbud
Jack Houck
Andrija Puharich
Elizabeth Rauscher
Dennis Stillings

Subscription fee: $15 per year ($25 overseas). Membership rates vary.

For information, contact:
ARCHAEUS PROJECT
629 Twelfth Avenue SE
Minneapolis, MN 55414

Capitol
Information
Association

The People's CIA†

The Capitol Information Association Newsletter isn't what you find everywhere. It's articles have included: No More IRS Audits, FBI Con Letters, CIA Censorship, IRS Agent Arraigned, and Secret Court Releases Information.

Beginning with the April 1985 issue it will include a regular column by Lynn Johnston author of 'Who's Afraid of the IRS?'.
'I want to congratulate you... I became so interested in it, that I sat down and read it through from beginning to end...'

Martin A. Larson

'Your work is unique...'

B. Corbett

Lynn Johnston

☐ The cost is only $5/year (4 issues). Subscribe today.

Capitol Information Association has many hard to obtain handbooks including:

☐ IRS Special Agent Handbook.....$20

This is the IRS's 525 page Special Agent training/reference handbook.

The following is a brief overview of the handbook: • Statutory provisions

• General investigative procedure • Chemical weapons • Methods of proving income • Sources of information • Surveillance, Searches, Seizures

• Procedures and techniques in other investigations •

☐ CIA's 'Nicaragua' Manual (english translation).....$10

☐ IRS Law Enforcement Manual (partial).....$8

☐ Electronic Eavesdropping Techniques and Equipment.....$8

☐ Summary of Emergency Power Statutes.....$8

☐ How to use the Freedom of Information Act.....$8

☐ Catalog.....FREE

Please send me the items I have checked above. Enclosed is $_____.
(add 20% for first class shipping and handling)

Name: _____

Address: _____

City/State/Zip: _____

Send your order and payment (postal money orders appreciated) to: Capitol Information Association, Box 8275-C1, Ann Arbor, Michigan 48107

† not affiliated with the U.S. government

THE WILCOX REPORT

News, Reviews and Analysis of Contemporary Political
Movements of the Left and Right in American Society.

Directories~Bibliographies~Audio Tapes

Mental slavery is mental death, and every man who has given up his intellectual freedom is the living coffin of his dead soul.

Ingersoll

Send #10 SASE and $1.00 for catalog and sample copy.

LAIRD WILCOX

EDITORIAL RESEARCH SERVICE
BOX 1832, KANSAS CITY, MO 64141

Telos

A Quarterly Journal of Critical Thought

Issue No. 61

Fall 1984

Articles:

BOBBIO: The Future of Democracy

MAINWARING-VIOLA: Brazil and Argentina in the 1980s

SÖLLNER: Neumann, Kirchheimer and Marcuse

KARNOOEH: Culture and Development

KUZMICS: Elias' Theory of Civilization

POLLIS: Socialist Transformation in Greece

Notes and Commentary:

HOWARD: Socialism and Modernization in France

STOJANOVIC: Reforms in Yugoslavia

LEGGEWIE-LALONDE: Ecoliberalism Lives

HARASZTI: The Hungarian Peace Movement

RITTERSPORN: Religion in the USSR

BOYNE-LASH: Communication and Desire

LÖWENTHAL: Recollections of Adorno

Reviews:

FEHER: Topol and Neznansky, Red Square

LAYTON: Ehrenreich, The Hearts of Men

SONOLET: Bürger, Theory of the Avant-Garde

PIPA: Hoxha, The Titoites

GREGG: Dubiel, Theory and Politics

MORTNIER: Biro, Profane Mythology

BESNIER: Three Books on Neo-Conservatism

KIMMELL: Three Books on Revolution and Development

SÁNDOR: Feher-Heller, Hungary 1956 Revisited

Subscriptions cost $22 per year for individuals; $50 for institutions. Foreign orders add 10 percent. Checks must be in U.S. funds. No Canadian checks can be accepted. Back issues prior to No. 50 cost $5.50 each; No. 50 and subsequent issues are $6.00 each. Institutions pay $15.00 for all back issues. For a full list of available back issues and to subscribe, write:

Telos, 431 East 12th Street, New York, NY 10009

MIND CONTROL IN THE UNITED STATES

Steven Jacobson
with an Introduction by Antony C. Sutton

MIND CONTROL IN THE UNITED STATES by Steven Jacobson (with an Introduction by Antony C. Sutton) (Critique Publishing; Santa Rosa, CA; 1985)

"The most effective way to protect yourself from subconscious manipulation is by being aware of how it works." Author Jacobson, with extensive documentation, takes us on a journey of the multifaceted dimension of mind control and shows us how to save our mind and soul from the mind manipulators. The book leaves one pondering and wondering how we have been duped and how we actively engage ourselves in our own mental prisons. Jacobson encourages us to shatter the shackles and free our minds. Chapters include: Subliminal Communication; the Ruling Elite (Bilderbergers, CFR, et al); Film; Radio; Authority Images; 1984; Drugs; Sex; Mass Hypnosis; Music; Control of Information (media monopolies); Psychotherapy; Esoteric Knowledge; Meditation; Mental Health, and more. [ISBN: 0-911485-00-7; $4.95 plus $1.50 for shipping & handling].

"Steven Jacobson has tackled an important and neglected issue, hypnotic mind control, and presented it in the context of a ruling class/conspiracy analysis of our society. Mr. Jacobson is at his best in elucidating the mechanisms of hypnotic and subliminal suggestion. He also successfully debunks the common disinformation that hypnotism cannot be coercive or doesn't function without the voluntary consent of the subject." — Peter E. McAlpine, author of The Occult Technology of Power and former editor of Conspiracy Digest

"MIND CONTROL IN THE UNITED STATES will increase your sense of skepticism when it comes to the establishment and its representatives... You do have a duty to freedom to find the truth and spread the truth. Jacobson's book will be invaluable in this task. At least you will know who tried to brainwash you and how they tried." — Antony C. Sutton, from the Introduction

"A guided tour — conducted in the most conscious, sober style conceivable — of the subliminal seductions that daily batter our resistance.... We can't get too much help in our struggle to raise the threshold of suggestibility high enough to fend off these relentless assaults on individual autonomy." — Marian Kester, free-lance writer and regular contributor to Critique — A Journal of Conspiracies and Metaphysics

TO ORDER SIMPLY SEND $4.95 PLUS $1.50 (SHIPPING & HANDLING)
TO CRITIQUE PUBLISHING, P.O. BOX 11451, SANTA ROSA, CA 95406.
PUB DATE IS MAY/JUNE 1985. ADVANCED ORDERS ARE ENCOURAGED. MAKE CHECKS AND/OR MONEY ORDERS PAYABLE TO "CRITIQUE."

THE CONSPIRACY TRACKER has covered: Masonic Murders (JFK, Pope JP I, Princess Grace), Serial Killers and their cult connections (Son of Sam, Hillside Strangler, Jack the Ripper, Henry Lee Lucas), Secret Societies (Illuminati, Golden Dawn, Cult of the Black Snake, the Frankist Cult of the All-Seeing Eye), the manipulation of UFO events by the secret societies, Anti-Gravity Technology, Tesla Weapons, Cattle Mutilations, the Sirius Mystery, the Holy Grail-Shambhala connection, Satanism, Zionism, Witchcraft, Nazi Werewolf Corps, P2, and more. SAMPLE: $2.25 (published monthly)

THE CONSPIRACY TRACKER
P.O. BOX 596
PATERSON, N.J. 07524

SHAVERTRON

MEGAZONE

Ever read about the Shaver Mystery, or caverns inhabited by mutants and non-human beings who secretly foist their will upon our surface world?

Ever wonder why so little is published on these subjects these days? We did; that's why we founded SHAVERTRON: "The Only

Source of Post-Deluge Shaverania."

SHAVERTRON fills the abyss for Shaver Mystery buffs and fans of Charles Fort's obscurania.

SHAVERTRON will satisfy your need to explore the outlands of literature.

Not sold at newsstands anywhere!

If you have an open mind, subscribe today!

One year/three issues: $9 in USA & Canada.

Overseas: $11 surface rate, $13 airmail.

USA funds please. Sample copies: $3.

Send all mail to: P.O. Box 248

Vallejo, California 94590.

THE ONLY SOURCE OF POST-DELUGE SHAVERANIA

ADVANCED SCIENCES

ADVISORY

The Official Journal of Advanced Sciences R&D Corp.

READ

Information from some of The Best Research Scientists in Subtle Energy of this day

LEARN

Important Information in the Field of Health & Agriculture

Subscribe now to the Advanced Sciences Advisory. A 48 page Bi-Monthly Journal at a rate of just $15.00 per year/six issues.
Sample Copy $2.50 postpaid.

Advanced Sciences R&D

P.O. Box 109

Lakemont, Georgia 30552

[404] 782-5347

CAMBRIDGE UFO RESEARCH GROUP

Large 40 page newsletter published every three months.
All UFO cases investigated by our group included in each issue. Actual UFO photos and actual drawings by witness of UFOs in several issues. U.S. $10.00 per year Subscription.

Send cheque or money order to: Mrs. Bonnie Wheeler, President, 2 Augusta Street, Cambridge, Ontario, Canada N1R 1G1.

POLITICS      UFO      RELIGION

The machinations of politics, your church and the UFO are so interwoven as to virtually be one and the same.

Learn of the UFOs that came to Earth eons ago, and still come to Earth today.

Learn of the extraterrestrials living within the hollow interior of Earth, the Moon, Mars and Mercury.

Read the book, Babylon:3. Order from SECRETS, Rt. 4, Box 156, Marshall, Ark. 72650. $5

CRITIQUE

A Journal of Conspiracies & Metaphysics

Introduction.....	i
Critique's Potpourri by Bob Banner .....	1
Afghanicide, The Famine TV Accident, Ethiopian Farm Policies Equal Famine  A Course on Miracles, F.O.I.A., Hypnosis and the Psi War, High Voltage  and Cancer, More on ELF, Changes in Global Weather, Resisting Influence  Infrared and the Edible Air Conditioner, the Hitler/Occult Connection  EMF: The Mind Fields, the Paper Plague, UFO / FOIA, A Cosmic Cover-up  Economic Briefs, Civilization on Mars, Marijuana: A Large Cash Crop  The Left Criticizes Israel
Return of the Baal: Metaphysical Exploration of Global Events by Jay Kinney .....	24
The Metaphysical Struggle.....	36
The Lord of the World by William Grimstad .....	39
Battlefield Earth: Covert Subversion of Humanity by Alanon .....	46
The Nuclear Threat Comedy by Ben G. Price .....	60
"I'm Alive" by Gary Butler .....	64
The Second Vatican Council: Spiritual Reform or Blueprint for Subversion by Joseph P. November .....	67
Exploring the Eleventh Dimension by Thomas Lyttle .....	74
The Un-Surprise Attack on Pearl Harbor by Richard H. Crum .....	76
Golitsyn: The KGB Defector by Robin Ramsay .....	88
The Universal Monetary Crisis by Robert Severin .....	92
Michele Sindona and the Vatican Bank Scandal by Peter Kross .....	95
Was Orwell Right? by John Bennett .....	101
The Secret World of Satanism in America by Gerald Dorset .....	106
Magic: The Science of the Future? by Edith Kermit Roosevelt .....	109
Power Psychics Control the World by Richard Clark, Ph.D. .....	112
Reviews and Letters.....	119